HOUSEKEEPERS troubled with vermin need be so no longer, if they use "COSTAR'S" Exterminator. We have used it to our satisfaction; and if a box cost $5, we would have it. We have tried poisons, but they effected nothing; but Costar's article knocks the breath out of Rats, Mice, Roaches, Ants and Bed-Bugs, quicker than we can write it. It is in great demand all over the country,—[Medina, Ohio, Gazette,

☞ Our city Marshal is bound to be up with the times in improvements. The cholera generating covered pavement in front of Bidwell's Block, has been thoroughly overhauled and cleaned out and a new row of hitching posts set at the outer edge of the pavement. This plan of arranging the gutters is a vast improvement on the old one and, as our streets are very wide it will be no inconvenience.

☞ The stone are mostly on the ground for the foundation walls of the new corner block, and the work will be commenced forthwith. There is some talk of extending the Block farther north so as to form another front on Railroad street, to be used in connection with the upper stories of the whole Block, as a Hotel, but this plan has not as yet been definitely fixed upon.

I. O. G. T. Second Day.

Convention met at the Hall at 8 A. M. on the 31st inst. for the exemplification of work of the Degree Lodges. At 9:50 A. M. adjourned and opened in general discussion, when after the usual opening the committee of arrangements recommended that some suggestions be made relative to the formation of "Bands of Hope," by Rev. S. E. Wishard:

After which a committee of one from each delegation was appointed to circulate and advance the interests of the Peninsular Herald:

The Convention decided that the collection for the Lecture fund as provided by the Grand Lodge should be taken by all the Lodges, at the first meeting in July.

Remarks upon the best manner of dealing with delinquent members were made by different members of the Convention, the prevailing opinion being that every effort should be made to keep all within our circle, to encourage, strengthen and support the work and endeavor by all laudable means to strengthen and sustain those who have been victims of habit.

Considerable discussion was brought out upon the theme of patronizing establishments where Liquor was sold as a beverage, which generally met a hearty disapproval. All who spoke, taking the stand, that, as Temperance men, we should maintain temperance men, and discountenance all who deal in intoxicating drinks: the following resolution was offered by Mr. Slocum of Manchester:

Resolved, That we as an order do abstain from dealing with any man, or men in any way who sell Liquor, in violation of law, or as prohibited by the laws of this Order and that the delegates recommend this to the different Lodges in the County for adoption.

Much interest was developed in discussing the following question: Can members of the Order drink sweet Cider, or the juice of the Apple before fermentation without violating their pledge.

The question was ably discussed by Messrs. Wishard, Donnelly, Wright, Peters, and others, the position being taken on the one side that before fermentation it contained no alcohol and consequently did not come within the spirit of the prohibited articles and on the other, the almost utter impossibility of fixing the exact time when fermentation commences. After some discussion the following Resolution was presented:

Resolved, That in the sense of this Convention the use of Cider or Apple juice before fermentation, is not a violation of the pledge.

Lost—by 10 yeas to 15 nays.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this Convention tender their cordial thanks to the citizens of Tecumseh, for their generous hospitality in entertaining the delegates of this Convention.

Resolved, That we return our thanks to the Tecumseh Herald, for publishing the minutes of this Convention and for the copies of the paper sent in to us during our sitting.

It was recommended that a meeting of the delegates be held upon the street to relate some of the workings of the Order in different places, after which the convention having enjoyed through the whole time the most perfect harmony—adjourned.

☞ The city Fathers have come to the wise conclusion to have the Council proceedings published This should have been done long ago. It is simply keeping up with the times if nothing more.—Besides the citizens of the village should be thoroughly acquainted with the village laws and ordinances, plans of public improvement &c., and they cannot become so unless the proceedings are published.

☞ We notice that considerable building is going on this summer in the line of dwelling houses. Mr. A. B. Ward and Mr. L. Drew are putting a second story upon their houses and finishing them up in modern style, which when finished will make very neat residences. Prof. Thomas is putting up a fine house at the head of Shawnee street.

☞ The members of the Tecumseh Base Ball Club, will meet at the office of Dr. Pelham, on Friday evening next to arrange programme. Every member is requested to be present.

C. A. WRIGHT, Sec'y.

"Long Ago's."

When the golden gates of sunset
Are closing in the west;
When his good night kiss, calls blushes,
To her lovely cheeks and breast;
When upon her gentle bosom—
Brightest evening stars repose;
Then, the zephyrs waft so sweetly
Thoughts of dearest "Long-ago's."

When the modest greyish twilight
Lays her gauzy robe aside;
Donning one that's more befitting—
Sable midnight's lovely bride;
When her City tresses sparkle
With pure diamonds, rich and rare;
Then, sweet "long-ago's," come rushing
Through the soft enchanted air.

When the silver moon is shining
Through my chambers window pane;
When the nightingale is singing—
Her sweetest song again;
When the Whipporwill is telling
His many sorrows o'er;
"Long-ago's," again seem wafted,
From a far—far, distant shore.

When the small hours gently chide me,
Bidding me "go seek repose;"
And I rest me on my pillow,
While my drowzy eyelids close;
Then, sweet dreams the picture brightens—
In the soft, light back-ground fair;
Dearest long-ago's with loved ones—
All, yes all, seem standing there.

A Curiosity.

Cleaning house is a curious institution, and frequently brings many things to the light. While Mr. Abe Pelham's wife was engaged in her usual yearly cleaning, she came across an old Deed, made in the year 1716, just 150 years ago. We have had the pleasure of seeing the deed and it is really a great curiosity. It is written on one side in a large bold hand, and signed and sealed in regular order.

The Fenians.

The Fenians are rushing into Canada, it is estimated, at the rate of one thousand a day. All those who desire to aid in freeing Canada should repair to the frontier forthwith but all who wish first class insurance, whether it be Life, Fire, or accident, should go immediately to S. C. Stacys Insurance Office in Union Block up stairs and get "the Genuine article." Please call and examine our stock.

A CARD.—Having secured the services of Mr. A. Fosistel as watch workman, he having had seven years experience in Germany, not only in reparing, but in manufacturing watches, I can safely recommend him to the public as being the best watch workman in the county.—Particular pains will be given, not only to fine watches but to all, and all work warranted. J. D. Robbins.

☞ A violent thunder storm, accompanied with copious showers of hail and rain, visited this locality last Wednesday evening, and continued for some hours.—At one time the whole heavens were one lurid flame from the lightning. It seems as if it was the final breaking up of winter.

☞ A small boy whose name we were unable to learn, was kicked by a horse, in Macon, a day or two ago and instantly killed.

Died.

At Tecumseh, Mich., Tuesday May 29th, CHARLES WILLARD, oldest son of S. W. and E. W. Temple, aged 5 years, 5 months and 16 days.

In Ridgeway, June 2d, 1866, MRS. ELIZA, Relict of Hon. Oliver Miller, aged 65 years.

The funeral services on the solemn occasion, conducted by Rev. Skillman of P. D. R. Church, were said to have been exceedingly appropriate.

☞ Samuel Rappleye was relieved of his obligation to donate a lot for the new M. E. Church in Ridgeway, on condition of erecting a brick block thereon.

☞ The street sprinkler is now ready for action and will commence operations as soon as the clerk of the weather shall decide that his services are required.

☞ The old Odd Fellows Hall has been cleansed and repaired, and has been rented by the Good Templars for a Lodge room. It is the finest and most commodious Hall in the village when in good repair, and will be an excellent room for the I. O. G. T. Their Lodge here is a very large one and they require more room than the present Odd Fellows Hall affords.

☞ The young men of this place are making arrangements for organizing a Base Ball Club, and any one wishing to join can learn particulars by calling upon Abe Pelham at his Office, or Charley at M. Wright's Drug Store. Here is a chance for all those wishing an hour or two of recreation and healthy exercise, every day. Go in b'hoys.

Sheep Shearing Festival.

Pursuant to announcement the Lenawee County Agricultural Society held its annual Sheep Shearing Festival on the Fair Grounds in Adrian, on Friday June 1st, 1867. But a small number of people were in attendance, though the animals exhibited showed in their fair proportions the progress which has of late years been made in sheep raising.

Twenty-two entries of sheep were made, comprising some of the best sheep stock of the county.

The following were appointed Judges on shearing; Abner Simmons, Franklin; George Bowen, Tecumseh; Winslow Bates, Rome; Clinton Blackman, Cambridge; Washington Moore, Medina

CROUP.—Almost daily we are called upon to chronicle the death of some lored one, by this dread direase, which often takes its victim away from loving parents with only very short notice. Every mother should supply herself with Coe's Balsam; for it is no exaggeration to say it will cure ninety-nine cases in every one hundred, if taken in season. There are very many mothers who will tell you they owe the dear life of some dear one to this wonderful medicine. One very desirable quality is, that it leaves no bad effect, it being perfectly harmless. In cases of cough, hoarseness, or tickling in the throat, it has no equal

☞ On Friday last, a little boy 3 yrs. old, son of E. Carter, living on the farm of W Osborn of Macon, fell into the well. The child was rescued therefrom by his mother but died while she had gone for assistance.

The rumored pardon of Raphael Semmes proves untrue, although he is earnestly pressing his application for amnesty.

Applicants for pardon are not so numerous as they were a few months ago, but those who apply personally are none the less important.

The civil rights bill, legalizing slave marriages, and making all persons equal before the law, has passed both Houses of the Tennessee Legislature, and is now a law.

Several hundred men, said to be Fenians, arrived at Buffalo early on the evening of the 30th, and went into secret council with their brother Fenians there. There is little, if any, apprehension of a raid from that quarter.

The proceedings in the Republican Senatorial caucus revealed the fact that more than two-thirds of the Senators will support the constitutional amendment in a modified form. The third section will probably be stricken out.

The last exhibit of the Comptroller of the Currency shows that there are one thousand six hundred and fifty national banks, with an aggregate circulation amounting to $276,589,510, which is secured by bonds held by the United States Treasurer, estimated at $324,364,350. The total capital is $414,941,479.

The Western division of the Fenian army passed through Indianapolis on the 28th, en route for Buffalo, on a special train over the Bellefontaine road. The majority of them came from Nashville, Tenn., and the party were joined by about a hundred from Indianapolis. There were about 700 altogether. They go to take part in President Roberts's grand June demonstration on Canada. Arms and hard tack accompanied them.

The Chicago Times announces that President Johnson has accepted the invitation extended by the Douglas Monument Association, on the occasion of laying the corner stone of the monument, on condition that the ceremonies shall be postponed until after the adjournment of Congress. It is also informed that the cabinet advises acceptance, and that they will all, if possible, accompany him to Chicago.

There was a fearful slaughter on April 10, of 1,200 Paraguayans, who attacked the Brazilian batteries on the island opposite Itapiru. Ten thousand Brazilians crossed the Parana on the 16th without opposition, drove the Paraguayan skirmishers, defeated 3,000 next morning, and occupied Itapiru, and captured four guns and a flag. The whole allied army were transferred by the 19th to the Paraguayan side of the Parana.

Judge Drake, of the United States Court at Provo City, Utah, upon an application for naturalization papers, has refused to issue them to any man practicing polygamy either prior or subsequent to the passage of the act of Congress on that subject. It was held that a man who defied the anti-polygamy act of Congress, or any other law of the country, and persistently refused to obey the law of the United States, was in no way entitled to citizenship or any of the benefits accruing therefrom.

Feniana.

The Roberts wing of the Fenian Brotherhood, under direction of General Sweeny, has inaugurated a campaign by a raid upon Canadian soil, which promises to assume the dimensions and character of an invasion. On the night of the 31st, a force of Fenians, variously stated at from 1,000 to 1,600, crossed into Canada, and occupied the village of Fort Erie, opposite Buffalo. They met with no opposition, and are being reinforced by multitudes of bands organized and unorganized, from all quarters. This expedition is under the command of Col. O'Neil of Nashville, Tennessee. The men are well armed and disciplined, and their advent has created great excitement in Canada, especially at Toronto, which is threatened. Volunteers are called out to repel the invasion. In the meantime a considerable force is concentrating at St. Albans, Vermont, and as General Sweeny does not not seem to be directing the western movement in person, it appears probable that the Fort Erie raid is only a feint, while the real blow is to be struck at a point nearer the mouth of the St. Lawrence. From all quarters we have intelligence of bodies of Fenians hurrying North, and the names of several commanders, Federal and Confederate, who attained prominence in the war, are mentioned in connection with the movement. The United States is not idle, but is forwarding troops to the menaced localities, and revenue cutters are stationed at points likely to be used by the Fenians in crossing. It is believed that a large portion of the regular army in Canada is tinctured with disloyalty, and will join the Fenians, while the thoroughly organized circles in Canada will rise and assist the invaders. The French element of the population is also believed to be in sympathy with the movement.

The New York Herald's despatches give detailed accounts of the crossing, and report the killing of the Mayor of Fort Erie, who attempted to read the riot act to the invaders. Several Canadians are also reported killed by the pickets. The correspondent predicts a disastrous failure to the expedition, as the Canadian troops are now advantageously posted, and prepared for the intruders.

Many conflicting reports are received, too voluminous for publication, which indicate that the Fenian army, after first driving the Canadian volunteers, received a check, if not a positive repulse, on their way to Ridgeway, nine miles from Buffalo. The United States war steamer Michigan captured four hundred on a flat boat, while endeavoring to get back to Buffalo, and held them over night in the river under her guns, awaiting orders for their disposition. They had had neither food nor sleep, and will not be given up to the Canadians. It is believed, however, that the Niagara expedition is only a feint, and that an attack is about to be made from Ogdensburg or the Vermont frontier, as Fenians are gathering there, and Gen. Sweeney is said to have also gone there.

In the Niagara affair, the Fenians are said to have lost twenty-five, and the British fifty.

Opposite Detroit and Sarnia great excitement has prevailed, and on Sunday, upon the rumor of Fenian invasion, churches were dismissed summarily. The Fenians captured by the Canadians, it is said, will be shot.

Southern News.

A tornado swept destructively over Jackson, Miss., on the 30th.

The trial of Jeff. Davis will not take place before October. The government has rejected the Norfolk indictment as worthless.

General Stoneman's report relative to the Memphis riots states that 24 negroes were killed, eight of whom were discharged soldiers; and that the rioters were composed of the police, firemen, and the rabble.

Torrell, the Kentucky murderer, was captured by citizens on the 25th, and sent to Louisville. He received three shots before being captured, and it is supposed they will prove mortal. A man named Baker was also captured with him. A third associate escaped.

One of the Grand Jurors who found the treason indictment against Jeff. Davis, was one of a firm of large ice dealers in Richmond. Of course, no one knew how he voted in the Grand Jury room, but on his return from the Court he received a large number of notices from his customers that they should want no more of his ice, and the result was that he was forced to sell out and close up his business.

Death of General Scott.

WEST POINT, May 29—Gen. Scott died at five minutes past eleven o'clock this morning. He was out on Saturday afternoon, and then showed no signs of his early demise. On Sunday he began failing quite fast, though none of his physicians expected he would expire at such an early day. He was perfectly conscious up to the moment of his death, though he had lost his voice some two hours previously. He recognized the Chaplain of the Post ten minutes before he died, and clasped his hands in silence.

He was born at Petersburg, Va., on the 13th of June, 1786, and died at five minutes past eleven, A. M., on May 29th, and was therefore almost eighty years of age. Few men had a more eventful career than his has been. His history is close identified with that of his country, and his death will be everywhere mourned.

Western Matters.

The Adrian, Michigan, Expositor states that in digging a cellar in that place last week, gas and crude petroleum flowed. There is quite an excitement over it.

A farmer from the country complained to the Cincinnati Chief of Police that he had been swindled, having sold a quantity of gold at 130, when it was quoted at 140¼. He did not take the papers.

The steamer Leonora, bound for Fort Benton, was burned below Yankton City, in the Upper Missouri, on the 24th. Loss on the boat, $25,000; insured for $15,00. Her valuable cargo was insured.

A destructive fire occurred at Battle Creek, Michigan, on the 31st, by which a hotel, wagon manufactury, and a number of other buildings were consumed. The loss is estimated at $90,000, with partial insurance.

The terms of sale of the Southern Pacific Railroad have been complied with, and the deed passed to John C. Freemont & Co. The purchasing party pay $1,300,000 for the road, and all the franchises, privileges, rights, &c. One-fourth of this amount is to be paid down, and the payment has been made.

At Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, on the 28th, Major General C. S. Hamilton was shot by R. A. Baker, Cashier of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, in a personal altercation. The General had two wounds, neither of which, it is thought, will prove fatal. He fell at the first fire, and was shot a second time while down, the ball grazing, but not penetrating, the skull. Baker is under arrest.

An Indian outbreak is reported in Arizona, between Fort Majors and Prescot. Five white men were prospecting and had a camp there. While four were absent, the Indians killed the other. The whites then went out and killed nine Indians, including the chief and several women and children. An alliance of Indians against the whites is feared, owing to the insufficiency of troops stationed in that territory.

A card is published in the Madison Journal by Horace Rubles, principal editor of that paper, announcing that he has declined the appointment tendered to him a short time since of Consul to Rotterdam. He states the circumstances of his appointment, in recommending which all the Union members of Congress joined. He has a strong desire to obtain some respite from exhausting editorial labors and visit Europe; but in view of the important questions now before the country, and the differences between the President and Congress, and the duties devolving upon the Union men, has concluded to continue his labors on the Journal.

Eastern Matters.

Senator Scovel, of New Jersey, is announced as a candidate for Congress. He is as yet unopposed.

The New York Board of Aldermen have proposed part of the City Hall Park for the United States Postoffice.

The great fire in Sandwich woods, in Eastern Massachusetts, last week, continued for three days, and burned over 7,000 acres, causing a loss of $70,000.

Congress Hall, one of the most magnificent fashionable hotels at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., was destroyed by fire on the 29th. Loss $200,000; partially insured.

In Rochester township, Beaver county, Pennsylvania, a few days ago, Mary Anderson was burned to death by an explosion of carbon oil, and her mother so much injured that no hopes are entertained of her recovery.

The most destructive fire in the history of the oil region occurred in Oil City, Pennsylvania, on the 24th. The whole east side of the creek, comprising half the business portion of the city, is in ashes, consisting of seventy-five stores, eight hotels, forty dwellings, a church, and a seminary. Loss, $1,000,000; insurance, $100,000.

A terrible tornado swept over the lower portion of Honesdale, Pennsylvania, on the 27th. The immense covered bridge spanning the Lackawanna river at Sixth street, was bodily lifted a distance of six feet in the air, and fell into the river a mass of ruins. A boy who had just crossed the bridge was carried some fifty feet up the river.

The Trenton (N. J.) Gazette of the 23d "Learns that Senator Wright, who has been for some time in ill health, is now lying at his residence in Newark in a very precarious condition. On Saturday he sustained a paralytic stroke, and on Monday was suffering from mental troubles. It is not regarded as possible that he can recover, though he may linger for some time in his present condition."

The very valuable leases held by Wm. B. Astor of Trinity Church in New York will terminate on the 31st of this month, and put the church into full control of property worth at least $6,000,000. Mr. Astor held possession of three hundred and thirty-six lots, which were let in 1767, at a very low rate of interest for the term of ninety-nine years. His income out of the houses built on them reached, in one year, the sum of $1,300,000.

The steamer Peruvian arrived at New York on the 30th from Liverpool, with 758 passengers. She lost during the passage 35 from cholera, and 28 are now sick on board, who will be transferred to the hospital ship. The steamship Union, which arrived at New York on the same day with immigrants, reports 33 deaths from cholera on the passage and has at present 15 cases of sickness from that disease on board. Two deaths from cholera occurred in New York on the 30th.

SLEEP AND DEATH.—As men begin to be about fifty years old, especially if of sedentary habits, the feeling on rising in the morning is as if they had not gotten enough sleep, not as much as they used to have, and as if they would like to have more but cannot get it. They look upon a healthy child sleeping soundly with feelings of envy. But it is curious to observe that there is a bliss to all in the act of going to sleep, a bliss we become cognizant of only when we happen to be aroused just as we are falling into strong sleep; and there are strong physiological reasons to suppose that this state is a counterpart of the great event that comes to all, the act of dying. In fact, those who have, in rare cases, been brought back to life when on its extremest verge, and in several cases as to those who have been recovered from drowning and other modes of strangulation, or simple smotherings, the expressions have been on returning to consciousness, "How delicious!"—"Why did you not let me go?" An eminent man thus brought back, represented that the last remembered sensations of which he was conscious were as if he were listening to the most ravishing strains of music Let us all, then, cherish the thought that our approach to the sleep of the grave is the strict counterpart of the approach to sleep.

Two Sides of One Transaction.

A few days since, writes a friend, as I was sitting with Brother D., in his office in Court Square, a client came in and said:

"Squire D., W., the stabler, shaved me dreadfully, yesterday, and I want to come up with him."

"State your case," says D.

"I asked him how much he would charge me for a horse and wagon to go to Dedham. He said one dollar and a half. I took the team and when I came back I paid him one dollar and a half, and he said he wanted another dollar and a half for coming back, and made me pay it."

D. gave him some legal advice, which he acted on as follows:

He went to the stabler and said:

"How much will you charge me for a horse and wagon to go to Salem?"

Stabler replied, "Five dollars."

"Harness him up."

Client went to Salem, came back by railroad, went to the stable, and said:

"Here is your money," paying him five dollars.

"Where is my horse and wagon?" says W.

"He is at Salem," says client; "I only hired him to go to Salem."

Gen. Scott.—His Life and Death

Lieutenant General Winfield Scott, who expired May 29th at West Point was born at Petersburg, Virginia, June 13th, 1786, and he was consequently eighty years of age, lacking sixteen days, at the period of his death. A life which extends over three quarters of a century, and which is identified with the infancy and maturity of the republic, and whose deeds have conferred a world wide reputation upon the possessor, is worth tracing in brief detail.

Left an orphan at an early age, he commenced the study of law, after having received the benefit of an education at William and Mary's college. He continued in the practice of law till his 22d year, when he was appointed a captain of light artillery, and assigned to the division of General Wilkinson, at Baton Rouge, Louisiana. Owing to some opinion expressed by him with reference to the Burr trial, he was suspended from duty after having served a year; but in 1812 he was promoted to a lieutenant coloneley, and was sent to the northern frontier. His first battle was that of Queenstown, in which he was taken prisoner by the British. He was exchanged after much difficulty, and, soon after, with the rank of Adjutant General, he joined the army under command of General Dearborn, and participated in the attack upon Fort George, in May, 1813; and whose flag he pulled down with his own hands after a desperate and gallant assault, in which he was severely wounded.

In the fall of the same year he was with the fruitless expedition which started down the St. Lawrence, directed against Montreal; and in the spring of the next year (1814) he was made a Brigadier General, when he commenced at Buffalo to infuse into his army the genius of a discipline which soon after bore most excellent fruit. In July he crossed the Niagara river and captured Fort Erie; and next day fought the celebrated battle of Chippewa, in which he routed a force fully equal to his own, by the superiority of his manoevering. A month later followed the historical battle of Lundy's Lane. Both these battles were gallantly contested, and the latter particularly so. It was fought against superior numbers, and was regarded as the most desperate which, up to that time, had ever been fought on the continent. It conferred upon General Scott a reputation for gallantry and ability which was never obscured, even by his record in Mexico.

Disabled by a painful wound, General Scott was kept from the service until after peace was declared with Great Britain. Upon his recovery he declined a seat in the cabinet of Secretary of War; but he was made a Major General, and soon after he visited France, partly as a diplomat and partly to avail himself of the advantage of association with the military men that had so long fought under Napoleon.

From 1815 to 1832 General Scott devoted himself to giving the country a military literature. He laid the foundations of our present system by publishing his "General Regulations for the Army" in 1825, and his "Infantry Tactics," which were, however, scarcely more than an adaptation from the French. In 1832 he was engaged in the celebrated Blackhawk war, during which he visited the Mississippi country, passing through Chicago on his way to the scene of operations. The result of this war, and the treaty of peace with the Sacs and Foxes, at Rock Island, are too well known to bear mention. During the same year the country became involved in the nullification troubles with South Carolina, and it was largely owing to the firmness, moderation, wisdom and sagacity of General Scott, that the country escaped a civil war.

In 1835 he was identified with the Seminole war in Florida, and with the Indian difficulties in the Creek country; and in 1838 with those in the Cherokee country. In 1839 the "patriot war" occurred on our northern border; and which, by the influence of General Scott, was finally brought to an amicable termination.

In 1841 General Scott, by the death of General Macomb, succeeded to the command of the armies of the United States. Five years later, war broke out between this country and Mexico. After Taylor had fought several battles, Scott was assigned to the command of the American army in Mexico, with a view of directing a movement upon the Mexican capital. In March of the succeeding year, 1847, he landed at Vera Cruz, and captured the place after a siege of twenty days; and ten days later he commenced his march towards the city of Mexico. The battle of Cerro Gordo soon occurred, and a little later, Jalapa, Perote and Puebla, fell into the hands of the victorious leader.

In August the march upon the Mexican capital was resumed by Scott, at the head of an army of a little more than 10,000 men. On the 10th, the United States forces reached the city, and then began a series of operations which, for daring, and desperation, and savage fighting, and furious assaults, were not eclipsed at any time during the late war. Involved in the operations against the Mexican capital were the battles of Cherubusco, Chapultepec, and several minor operations; and in which first came into notice many of the men who, in the late war, took prominence in the conflict. On the 14th of September the city of Mexico was entered by our troops, its 32,900 defenders having given way to the desperate valor of the handful of men who opposed them. In March of the next year a treaty of peace was negotiated between the United States and Mexico, and General Scott returned home.

In 1852 he was nominated by the Whig party for the Presidency, but, after a campaign in which Scott limited his efforts mainly to traversing the country, he was defeated by over 200,000 votes. In 1855 the rank of Brevet Lieutenant General was revived for his benefit, and was so arranged as to expire with his death. In 1859 he settled satisfactorily some threatened differences about boundaries, which arose between the United States and British America.

When the civil war broke out, General Scott was one of the foremost in giving in an unqualified adhesion to the Government. His first step was to provide for the safety of the national capital and to secure the inauguration of Mr. Lincoln. He also interested himself at once in the war, and projected the plan of a campaign against the South, which, at least, had the merit of breadth, but which, owing to the enormous extent of territory, the ignorance of our troops, and the difficulty of putting the enormous levies in condition, was never successfully extended. Whether right or wrong, the country, soon after the commencement of the war, demanded, almost unanimously, that the command of the armies should be given to other and younger men. The great age of General Scott was believed by many to militate against his efficiency; and, in obedience to this universal impression, he soon after relinquished his active participation in the military operations of the country. In the fall of 1861 he visited Europe for his health. His record since his return is so fresh that allusion to it in detail would be superfluous.

HIS DEATH.

The New York Herald publishes the following account of his death, written on the same day, from Roe's Hotel, West Point:

Lieut. Gen. Winfield Scott died at this house to-day at five minutes past eleven. He departed peacefully. No struggle indicated the passage of the old hero's soul from its earthly tenement. Although his demise was anticipated, yet his death was comparatively sudden. Upon his arrival here on the evening of the 10th inst., by special boat from New York, it was observed that he was very feeble. Upon descending from the carriage he tottered a little and had to pause on every step as he mounted to the hotel. After a few days however, he rallied considerably, and as late as Saturday, at half-past two, was out to the library and the village, riding. The same day he wrote some letters to his friends; but a few days before requested General Callum, commandant of the post, to indite a letter for him, which he franked himself, though in almost illegible hand.

He appeared to suffer from no specific ailment, but rather from a general decline of physical strength. His mind was clear to the last. So little expectation was there of his immediate demise that his daughter, Mrs Hoyt, of New York, who had been staying with him for several days, left here for home yesterday. Last night the General was taken with a chill, and the Assistant Surgeon of the post, Dr. Marsh, was immediately summoned. Even then there appeared to be no danger, and at 9 o'clock this morning Dr. Marsh assured Gen. Callum that he had no apprehensions of immediate dissolution; but in a short time it became evident that the eventful and useful life of the patriot soldier was drawing to a close.

The chaplain, Rev. J. A. French, was called in, and taking the General's hand recited a prayer. Though quite conscious and cognizant that death was upon him, the power of speech was gone, but the dying soldier pressed the hand of the clergyman and bowed his head repeatedly in token of his consciousness of the solemn rites which Mr. French was performing according to the rules of the Episcopal church.

At precisely five minutes after eleven, quietly as if in slumber, the patriot whose life has been so intimately associated with the military history of his country passed away.

There were present with him at the last moment Gen. G. W Callum, Commandant of West Point, and for many years aid to General Scott; Surgeon Head, Assistant Surgeon Marsh, Chaplain French, and the General's faithful body servant. Gen. Callum immediately telegraphed to Mrs. Hoyt, who arrived here at five o'clock this afternoon

Gen. Scott had only been confined to bed for the last three days, but during that time his strength was gradually failing, and he seemed to have a presentiment that this was his last visit to West Point, in which institution he took an intense interest, and at which he spent every summer for the last forty years. When coming from the boat on the 10th of May he remarked to a friend that he had come to the old academy to die, and in conversation with Capt. Boynton a few days ago, he replied to some remark concerning his visit to West Point that he came there to be buried.

The last words of Gen. Scott are worth remembering. About twenty-five minutes before his death he addressed his ostler, Allen, saying: "James, how is the horse?" "He is well, General." "Take care of him, James," said the dying hero, and these were the last intelligent words he uttered. In less than half an hour all was over, and Gen. Scott had become immortal.

Aerial Navigation.

From the New York Tribune, May 26.

The long anticipated attempt at aerial navigation, which it was promised the people of New York should witness, has at last taken place. About four o'clock yesterday afternoon, Dr. Solomon Andrews, the inventor and constructor of the "Flying Ship," of which a full account was given in the Tribune a few weeks since, accompanied by a party of friends, started with his apparatus to make the trial which he has consented shall be considered the crucial test of the correctness or fallacy of his theories of navigation. The ascent was made from the inclosed yard at the corner of Greene and Houston streets, where the apparatus has been for several weeks on exhibition. The party of adventurers comprised Dr. Andrews and Messrs. George W. Trow, C. M. Plumb, and G. Waldo Hill. So quietly had all these arrangements taken place that very few persons beside the travellers themselves were aware that the trial was to occur that day. Dr. Andrews commenced filling the balloon of his vessel about 3 o'clock in the morning, and about 3 o'clock p. m. it was pronounced to be ready. The other preparations occupied but a short time, and about 4 o'clock, as we have said, the signal was given to "cut loose," and the ship and its living freight rose rapidly into the air. The yard which had contained the apparatus being scarcely large enough to receive it, and inclosed with a high fence, and further surrounded with lofty houses and chimneys, it had been feared that some difficulty would be encountered in getting it out, but in this respect the voyagers were happily disappointed, the balloon rising almost directly up until it was above all surrounding obstacles, when it began to drift rapidly away. Almost at the start, by some mischance, the rudder-ropes became entangled in some portion of the rigging, which prevented her steering. The wind was at the time blowing a light but steady breeze from the southwest, and the balloon drifted with it for some considerable distance. At last, however, the voyagers seemed to get their machine under control, for they turned her repeatedly in different directions, and at last headed her to the northward and eastward, crossed the East river, and passed rapidly out of sight. The rate of speed of the machine, when last seen, seemed to be about 20 or 25 miles an hour.

Since the above was written, we have seen Mr. Trow, one of the gentlemen who accompanied Dr. Andrews in his trip, and have learned from him the particulars of the voyage. At first starting, as we apprehended, the rope by which the rudder is managed, became entangled, and the vessel drifted some distance before she could be controlled. When the ropes became clear, it was found that she could be readily managed and turned in any direction, but owing to inability to give the machine as much inclination as we needed, they were unable to make headway against the wind which had by this time become quite fresh. The utmost they could do was to hold themselves from going with the wind, but not to travel against it. Under these circumstances, it was not judged advisable to go very far away, and after cruising about for a while, the voyagers finally landed near the village of Astoria, L. I. The people of Astoria rendered them every assistance to secure and pack the balloon, and they all reached New York late in the evening, highly pleased with their trip, Dr. Andrews and his companions are all satisfied that by making some trifling alterations in the rigging of the apparatus, they will be able to make headway against any ordinary breeze, and they are all sanguine as to the final success of their plan. As soon as the requisite alterations are completed, another trial will be made, of which public notice will be given.

IT is stated that the immense hills of slag that surround iron furnaces where iron is found is about to be utilized. An invention has recently been patented in England by which slag is to be used as a substitute for emery. It is said to be even superior to emery in polishing steel, iron, and other metals, and the new substance called "metallim" into which the slag is to be made, can be produced at about one-fifth the cost of emery.

IN a second telegraphic contest, Mr. Kettles of Falls River, Mass., has again been adjudged champion telegrapher of New England and New York. The Fall River Monitor considers him the most rapid and correct operator in this country, if not in the world.

DESCRIPTION FROM

Fowler & Wells "Life Illustrated.'

Fig. 1.

The general appearance of the machine, and the position of the operator, are shown in Fig. 1. The machine consists of a box or tub, having a semi-cylindrical bottom, and square or plane sides. One side is formed into a wash board, as shown at C, Fig. 2. A disc, A, with a corrugated face, is hung on a shaft so as to be free to revolve parallel to the wash-board, C. A crank at the end of the shaft serves to give motion to the disc. The whole machine is placed on an incline, as represented, so that the weight of the disc and crank tend to cause it to slide toward the wash-board with a force sufficient to give the required pressure to the clothes, which are placed between A and C, as shown at B, Fig. 2. A plug, D, serves to draw off the water when desired.

The manner of constructing the face of the wash-board, and disc is shown at Figs. 3 and 4. The corrugations are made by carving out the solid, hard wood, and are not nailed on in separate pieces, and as a consequence no nail heads project to tear the clothes.

In operating the Machine, boiling water is poured in to about the height represented. A strong suds is then made by introducing soap cut into thin slices, or shavings, and rotating the crank a few times. The clothes are then placed between the washboard and disc; the crank is then worked backwards and forwards from left to right with the handle upwards as in Fig. 1, and occasionally turned clear round to change the position of the clothes, reversing the motion at every turn. The gravity of the disc and crank produces the required pressure, without any extra labor on the part of the operator, and the clothes are rolled and squeezed between the corrugated surfaces, thus washing them chiefly by the action of the water and the opening of the fibres.

The machine is built in a very simple and substantial manner, and is not liable to get out of order.

The following are some of the advantages claimed by the inventor of this machine over others:

It washes the smallest as well as the largest fabric, in a length of time proportionate to the size of the piece, and therefore, to wash a collar, it requires much less time and labor than to wash a shirt, being a decided advantage over other machines, which require as much time for one as for the other.

The inclined action of the disc regulates its pressure without requiring extra labor of the operator, and it works so easily that a very little power is required to operate it.

It does not tear or wear the clothes.

The machine is enclosed so as to keep in the heat and prevent slopping of the water.

The articles are lifted to the Wringer with a stick, so that it is not necessary to put the hands into the water.

Fig. 5.

The Union Wringer has a galvanized iron frame, cog wheels, pure rubber rolls, and can also be attached to any kind of wash tub, round or square, easier and quicker than any other wringer, and without the least injury to the tub. It will wringa large blanket or a single collar. It pleases everybody. It never rusts and never gets out of order, and is universally conceded to be the best and most reliable wringer in use.

The Union Clothes Dryer can be put up in a room or yard and folded into a small compass.

The Union Ironing Table and Skirt Board combined. A perfect novelty.

The American Mangle or Ironing Machine entirely dispenses with heat, and makes all plain articles beautifully smooth and glossy. Simple and easy to work.

Call and see above articles in use at either of our depots, or send for circular, terms, &c.

Our Machines have a standard reputation, and are sold entirely on their own merits, without the aid of "Recommendations," of which we could furnish thousands if needful. They speak for themselves.

THE LITTLE WIFE.

Frown not, my love! ah, let me chase
Away the shade of care that lies
To-night so darkly on your face,
And mist-like o'er your manly eyes,
Ah, let me try the winning ways
You said were mine—the angel art,
To pour at once ten thousand rays
Of dancing sunlight on your heart!
My own, my life!
Your little wife
Must bid these gloomy thoughts depart.

When love was young and hopes were bright,
I thought in all that dream of bliss
That clouds might come like these to-night,
And hours of sorrow such as this.
And then I said my task shall be
To soothe his heart so fond and true,
And he who loves me thus shall see
How much his little wife can do.
My own, my life!
Your little wife
Must bid you dream that dream anew.

Then let me lift those locks that fall
So wholly o'er your noble brow,
And smooth with fingers soft and small
The veins that corn your temples now;
How soft when ached your wearied head
From manly care and thought divine,
You've held me to your heart and said
You wanted love so deep as mine!
My own, my life!
Your little wife
That love is all her life's design.

And here it is—a love as wild
As e'er defied the world's control;
The fondness of a tearful child,
The passion of a woman's soul,
All mingled in my breast for thee
In one hot tide—I cannot speak;
But feel my throbbing heart and see
Its brightness burning in my cheek—
My love, my life!
Your little wife
Should cheer you or her heart would break.

Ah, now the breast I found so cold,
Grows warm within my close embrace;
And smiles as sweet as those of old
Are stealing softly o'er your face;
And for within your bright ning eyes
My image true and clear, I see;
Each shade of care and sorrow flies,
And leaves your heart again to me—
My love, my life!
Your little wife
It's only queen must ever be.

MOTHER MAGPIE'S MISCHIEF.

Old Mother Magpie was about the busiest character in the forest. But you must know that there is a great difference between being busy and industrious; and this was the case with Mother Magpie.

She was always full of everybody's business but her own,—up and down, here and there, everywhere but in her own nest, knowing every one's affairs, telling what every body had been doing or ought to do, and ready to cast her advice gratis at every bird and beast of the woods.

Now she bustled up to the parsonage at the foot of the oak tree, to tell old Parson Too whit what she thought he ought to preach for his next sermon, and how dreadful the morals of the parish were becoming. Then after perfectly bewildering the old gentleman, who was always sleepy of a Monday morning, Mother Magpie would take a peep into Mrs. Oriole's nest, sit chattering on a bough above, and pour forth floods of advice, which poor little Mrs. Oriole used to say to her husband, bewildered her more than a hard northeast storm.

"Depend upon it, my dear," Mother Magpie would say, "that this way of building your nest, swinging like an old empty stocking from a bough, isn't at all the thing. I never built one so, in my life, and I never have headaches. Now you complain that your head aches when I call upon you. It's all on account of this way of swinging and swaying about in such an absurd manner."

"But my dear," piped Mrs. Oriole, "the Orioles always have built in this manner, and it suits our constitution."

"A fiddle on your constitution! How can you tell what agrees with your constitution unless you try? You own you are not well; you are subject to headaches, and every physician will tell you that a tilting motion disorders the stomach and acts upon the brain. Ask old Dr. Kite. I was talking with him about your case only yesterday, and he says 'Mrs. Magpie, I perfectly agree with you.'"

"But my husband prefers this style of building."

"That's only because he isn't properly instructed. Pray, did you ever attend Dr. Kite's lectures on the nervous system?"

"No, I have no time to attend lectures. Who would set on the eggs?"

"Why your husband, to be sure, don't he take his turn in setting? If he don't he ought to. I shall speak to him about it. My husband always set regularly half the time, that I might have time to go about and exercise."

"O Mrs. Magpie, pray don't speak to my husband; he will think I have been complaining."

"No, no, he won't! Let me alone. I understand just how to say the thing. I've advised hundreds of young husbands in my day, and I never give offence."

"But I tell you, Mrs. Magpie, I don't want any interference between my husband and me, and I will not have it," says Mrs. Oriole, with her little round eyes flashing with indignation.

"Don't put yourself in a passion, my dear; the more you talk, the more sure I am that your nervous system is running down, or you wouldn't forget good manners in this way. You had better take my advise for I understand just what to do,"—and away sails Mother Magpie; and presently young Oriole comes home, all in a flutter.

"I say, my dear, if you will persist in gossipping over our private family matters with that old Mother Magpie—"

"My dear, I don't gossip; she comes and bores me to death with talking, and then goes off and mistakes what she has been saying for what I have said."

"But you must cut her."

"I try to, all I can, but she won't be cut."

"It's enough to make a bird swear," said Tommy Oriole.

Tommy Oriole, to say the truth, had as good a heart as ever beat under bird's feathers; but then he had a weakness for concerts or general society, because he was held to be, by all odds, the handsomest bird in the woods, and sung like an angel; and so the truth was he didn't confine himself so much to the domestic nest as Tom Titmouse or Billy Wren. But he determined that he wouldn't have old Mother Magpie interfering with his affairs.

"The fact is," quoth Tommy, "I am a society bird, and Nature has marked out for me a course beyond the range of the common-place, and my wife must learn to accommodate. If she has a brilliant husband, whose success gratifies her ambition and places her in a distinguished public position, she must pay something for it. I'm sure Billy Wren's wife would give her very bill to see her husband in the circles where I am quite at home. So to say the truth, my wife was all well enough content till old Mother Magpie interfered. It is quite my duty to take strong ground, and show that I cannot be dictated to."

So, after this, Tommy Oriole went to rather more concerts, and spent less time at home than ever he did before, which was all that Mother Magpie effected in that quarter. I confess this was very bad in Tommy; but then birds are no better than men in domestic matters, and sometimes will take the most unreasonable courses, if a meddlesome Magpie gets her claw into their nest.

But old Mother Magpie had now got a new business in hand in another quarter. She bustled off down to Water-dock Lane, where, as we said in a former narrative, lived the old music teacher, Dr. Bullfrog. The poor old Doctor was a simple-minded, good, amiable creature, who had played the double-bass and led the forest choir on all public occasions since nobody knows when. Latterly some youngsters had arisen who sneered at his performance as behind the age. In fact, since a great city had grown up in the vicinity of the forest, tribes of wandering boys broke up the simple tastes and wandering habits which old Mother Nature had always kept in those parts. They pulled the young checkerberry before it even had time to blossom, rooted up the sassafras shrubs and gnawed their roots, fired off guns at the birds, and, on several occasions when old Bullfrog was leading a concert, had dashed in and broken up the choir by throwing stones.

This was not the worst of it. The little varlets had a way of jeering at the simple old Doctor and his concerts, and mimicking the tones of his bass-viol. "There you go, Paddy-go-donk, Paddy-go-donk—umph—chunk,"—same rascal of a boy would shout, while poor old Bullfrog's yellow spectacles would be bedewed with tears of honest indignation. In time, the jeers of the little savages began to tell on the society of the forest, and to corrupt their simple manners; and it was whispered among the younger and more heady birds and squirrels, that old Bullfrog was a bore, and that it was time to get up a new style of music in the parish, and to give the charge of it to some modern performer.

Poor old Dr. Bullfrog heard nothing of this, however, and was doing his simple best, in peace, when Mother Magpie called in upon him, one morning.

"Well neighbor, how unreasonable people are! Who would have thought that the youth of our generation should have no more consideration for established merit? Now, for my part, I think your music teaching was never better; and as for our choir, I maintain that it was never in better order, but—well, one may wear her tongue out, but one can never make these young people listen to reason."

"I really don't understand you, ma'am," said poor Dr. Bullfrog.

"What! you havn't heard of a committee that is going to call on you, to ask you to ask you to resign the care of the parish music?"

"Madam," said Dr. Bullfrog, with all that energy of tone for which he was remarkable, "I don't believe it,—I can't believe it. You must have made a mistake."

"I mistake! No, no my good friend; I never make mistakes. What I know, I know certainly. Wasn't it I that said I knew there was an engagement between Tim Chipmunk and Nancy Nibble, who are married this blessed day? I knew that thing six weeks before any bird or beast in our parts; and I can tell you that you are going to be scandalously and ungratefully treated, Dr Bullfrog."

"Bless me, we shall all be ruined!" said Mrs. Bullfrog; "my poor husband—"

"O, as to that, if you take things in time, and listen to my advice," said Mother Magpie, "we may yet pull you through. You must alter your style a little,—adapt it to modern times. Everybody now is a little touched with the operatic fever, and there's Tommy Oriole has been to New Orleans and brought back a touch of the artistic. If you would try his style a little,—something Tyrolean you see."

"Dear madam, consider my voice, I could never hit the high notes."

"How do you know? It's all practice; Tommy Oriole says so. Just try the scales. As to your voice, your manner of living has a great deal to do with it. I always did tell you that your passion for water injured your singing. Suppose Tommy Oriole should sit half his days up to his hips in the water, as you do,—his voice would be as hoarse and rough as yours. Come up on the bank, and learn to perch, as we birds do. We are the true musical race."

And so, poor Mr. Bullfrog was persuaded to forego his pleasant little cottage under the cat-tails, where his green spectacles and honest round back had excited, even in the minds of the boys, sentiments of respect and compassion. He came up into the garden, and established himself under a burdock, and began to practice Italian scales.

The result was, that poor old Bullfrog, instead of being considered as a respectable old bore, got himself universally laughed at for aping fashionable manners. Every bird and beast in the forest had a gibe at him; and even old Parson Too-whit thought it worth his while to make him a pastoral call, and admonish him about courses unbefitting his age and standing. As to Mother Magpie you may be sure that she assured every one how sorry she was that that dear old Dr. Bullfrog had made such a fool of himself; if he had taken her advice, he would have kept on as a nice old Bullfrog should.

But the tragedy for the poor old music-teacher grew even more melancholy in its termination; for one day as he was sitting disconsolately under a currant-bush in the garden, practising his poor notes in a quiet way, thump came a great blow of a hoe which nearly broke his back.

"Hullo! what ugly beast have we got here?" said Tom Noakes, the gardener's boy. Here, here Wasp, my boy."

What a fright for a poor, quiet, old Bullfrog, as little wiry, wicked Wasp came at him, barking and yelping. He jumped with all his force sheer over a patch of bushes into the river, and swam back to his old home among the cat-tails. And always after that it was observable that he was very low spirited, and took very dark views of life; but nothing made him so angry as any allusion to Mother Magpie, of whom, from that time, he never spoke except as Old Mother Mischief.

A Tilt between Tilton and Beecher.

At the social reunion of the American Congregational Union, held in New York during anniversary week, the following passage between Theodore Tilton and Henry Ward Beecher elicited great good feeling and merriment:

Mr. Tilton, who was observed leaving the house, was suddenly called for by the audience. As Mr. Tilton went into the pulpit, Mr. Beecher, putting his hand on Mr. T.'s head, said jocosely, "I ordain him quoad hoc." [Laughter.] Mr. Tilton retorted as follows:

Mr. Chairman, when a man puts his hand on my head, I regard the act as an imposition [Laughter] second only to the imposition of calling a man up here who was quietly on his way out of the house.

Ladies and gentlemen, I am glad that you have made so handsome a gift to this church. I know this church. And I mean no disrespect to the gentleman on my right [Mr. Beecher] when I say that I have heard as good preaching in Washington as I have heard in Brooklyn. [Laughter.]

Mr. Beecher—Perhaps you kept awake. [Laughter.]

Mr. Tilton—There is a duty of laymen to keep awake, though sometimes it is very hard; and there is a duty also of ministers to keep awake. And though I do not wish to institute any comparison between the preaching here and the preaching down there; yet, since political preaching has been mentioned, I think the political preaching down there is just a little better than it is here. [Laughter and applause.] Now, ladies and gentlemen, I am sorry I said that, because it is so true! [Laughter.] I do not know that I can say anything better, so I will bid you good night.

☞ In the year 1853, when the yellow fever visited New Orleans, about five thousand of the supporters of grog shops died before the disease attacked a single temperance man; and in the same year, out of nine hundred who died of the cholera, only three were teetotalers. In Albany, N. Y., during that year, when the pestilence swept off one in sixty of the entire population, only one in twenty-five hundred of the strictly temperate were seized.

THE widow of Johnson Hatch, says the Maine Democrat, late of Wells, now upwards of seventy years of age, relates the following curious fact. Something more than thirty years since she heard a discussion in relation to how long the germinating principle in corn would continue sound and good. She resolved to try the experiment and prove the fact. She selected a nice sound ear of corn and planted a few kernels from it every year for thirty years. Every year for twenty-nine years the corn grew and flourished, but the thirtieth year it failed to come up or sprout at all.

WILLIAM NORTH was once asked by the editor of the paper with which he was connected, to write a leading article opposing the temperance movement, which was then making a great stir in New York. "Write me a good one, and I will give you twenty dollars for it," said the editor. "Now how long do you wish it?" enquired North. "As short as you can make it," was the reply. North sat down immediately, and wrote the following: "We would rather see the whole world drunk of their own accord, than one man sober on compulsion." The twenty dollars were immediately handed over, and the paragraph published as a leader.

GEN. GRANT told a correspondent who called to see him lately that he was breaking off smoking. When he was in the field he smoked eighteen to twenty cigars a day, but now he smokes only nine or ten.

THE Selma (Ala.) Messenger states that Robert Bonner recently explained his success with the New York Ledger as follows: "I found that the reading public wanted trash. I have given it, and you see the result. I engaged Edward Everett, Henry Ward Beecher, and other distinguished men to write for my paper, only stipulating that they should write trash. They complied with my condition, and now you have the secret in a nutshell."

The notorious Stephen H. Branch has applied to Collector Smythe, of New York, for office in the following letter:

To Mr. Smythe, Collector of the Port of New York:

Dear Sir—Will you have the kindness and charity to give me an office, to enable me to get some pork and beans, or liver or hash? My pants, too, are in a bad way, and my landlord wants his rent. For God's sake do relieve me. If you will, I will attend your funeral (if you die first), and fertilize your grassy hillocks with tears of gratitude. I refer to your bosom friends, Richard B. Connolly and Henry J. Raymond, for a knowledge of my character, who are my sacred friends.

With extreme affection,
STEPHEN H. BRANCH.

THE Daily News, (New York) makes public a story of deception and crime seldom met with. It appears that when Mrs. Gen. Eaton, so famous as the leader of social and fashionable life in Washington during the administration of President Jackson, became a widow in England, she returned to this country and took up her residence. She adopted two of her grandchildren, a boy and girl, and with a competence amounting to at least $100,000 was living very happily. At length an Italian adventurer named Bourgani was employed as a dancing master for the children, and they took such a liking to him that they prevailed on the grandmother to have him introduced to the home. The result was that he married Mrs. Eaton, and succeeded eventually in getting possession of all the property. Nor did he stop here, but prevailed upon her to place in his charge the property she had set apart for her grandchildren, of which he had the full use and benefit. He finally succeeded in corrupting the girl, and sailed for Europe last Wednesday, taking her with him as his wife. He left a note for Mrs. Eaton, in which he told her that he had converted all her property into cash, and would allow her $20 per week, if she would keep the matter quiet.

THE personal appearance of Santa Anna, who is now in New York, is thus described: "He is a man of about five feet nine inches in height, apparently some sixty years of age, with dark hair, slightly tinged with the chill destroyer's touch, and strongly marked features, typical of the intelligent Mexican, and the resolute, self-reliant man of the world. He wears no beard, so that the character of the lower portion of his features is readily legible. Although he uses a cane in walking, a casual observer would not suspect that the General had but one 'carnal' pin to stand on, the other, it is well known, being, like a toper's last drink on Saturday night under the new excise law, a "corker."

AMONG the many and ennobling pursuits lately developed by the Prince of Wales is a mania for going to fires. It is said there has not for some time been a conflagration in London, at which he has not been present.

THE friends of Mr. William Lloyd Garrison propose raising a fund of $50,000, to be presented to him in token of their appreciation of his labors in the anti-slavery cause.

Domestic Paragraphs.

—At Springfield, Massachusetts, there is a pop corn man who is also a good Methodist; but he got business sadly mingled with things spiritual at a late prayer meeting, where, when he attempted to join in the hearty responses of "Amen," he cried out instead, "Pop corn!" His sense of dignity led him to apologise in open meeting for his lapsus linguæ."

—A lad eleven years old, son of John Horning, of Ridgeville, Wisconsin, was leading a colt to the stable, recently, and carelessly tied the halter about his neck. The colt became frightened and dragged the boy till he was killed.

—A gentleman writing from Lafayette, Indiana, to a friend in Boston, says: "I called the other day upon a bride in this vicinity, worth in her own right not less than $80,000, and found her, in all her sweet simplicity, barefooted in the mow, looking for eggs. 'That old hen,' said she, 'has been clucking round here for a week. I have got twenty-six eggs, and she will have to spread herself, I bet you!'"

—The Northern Overland Telegraph enterprise is a gigantic affair. Through British America, 1,200 miles; through Russian America, 900 miles; across Behring Straits, 148 miles; across the Gulf of Anadyr, 210 miles; and thence overland to the Amoor river, 1,800 miles; or a total of 4,294 miles. At the Amoor it is to be continued by a Russian line connecting it with Irdoutsk, through Western Siberia, communicating with Nijni-Novgorod and Moscow, and thence to St. Petersburg. The capital involved amounts to $10,000,000.

—In the course of the last month a novel incident occurred in the capital of San Domingo. It appears that at a ball lately given there the Governor of the city entered the saloon on horseback, and, just when an enemy of his fired a revolver at him, the horse, raising his head, received the contents, falling dead in the middle of the saloon. The animal was buried next day with a military band and honors.

—At Indianapolis the other day a dog chased a rat from his nest, when it was found that the bed was built of greenbacks, amounting to $32. The nest was confiscated.

—The Chincha Islands do not exceed in extent two and a half square miles, yet for years past they have supplied guano to an average of four hundred ships per annum, the value of such cargoes in Europe being upwards of £50,000.

—A Boston paper tells of a St. Louis merchant who went to Boston last week to buy boots and shoes, but got disgusted because he couldn't have wine at his Sunday dinner, on account of the stringency of the anti-liquor laws, and went to New York and bought $40,000 worth of goods.

—A family of nine persons resided upon a farm in Derry, New Hampshire, for a period of fifty-three years, during which time there was neither a birth, death, nor marriage in the family; neither did they during the time put a letter in the Post-office, take one out, or take a newspaper.

—A young girl, named Julia Mackey, married a fellow named Jemmy Donnelly, in Buffalo, the other day, after a courtship of five minutes. She is only 15, and didn't even know her husband's name previous to the marriage.

—A young lady in Rockland, Maine, the other night in a fit of somnambulism, arose and cut off one half of her flowing hair. In the morning she was greatly astonished and grieved, and of course the barber had to complete the work she had unwittingly begun.

—A few days ago, a lady, wearing a red opera cloak, was passing along the street in Quincy, Ill., where some cattle were being driven. One of them attracted by the color of the cloak dashed forward, and planting a horn under each one of the lady's arms, pinned her fast to a fence close by. Singularly enough, she was released from her perilous and embarrassing position without injury.

—A young man in Newport, Vt., wanted a wife badly, and took a young lady out to ride. After proceeding a few miles he asked her, "Will you marry me?" The answer was as short as it was sweet: "No, sir!" Young gent says: "Well, get out, and go home a-foot, then." The young lady accepted his advice, and reached home in safety.

—A rich old bachelor at Greenfield offered a young lady there $100 for a kiss last winter. She gave him that kiss, and he counted out the money, but she refused to take it, when he told her he would give it to her when she got married. She was married a few days since, and is now $100 richer for that kiss.

—Charles A. Cook, of Milton, N. H., entered the army as a volunteer, and, of course, passed muster, before he was twelve years of age. He served about one year, was wounded four times, and now at fourteen years he draws a pension of ninety-six dollars a year.

—A writer in the New Orleans Christian Advocate says that, so far as he has ascertained, between one thousand and twelve hundred church houses were burned in the South during the war. These churches, he thinks, had cost the people not less than five millions of dollars. In the loss the Methodist were the greatest sufferers, the Baptists next, then the Presbyterians, the Catholics least.

—One evening, not long ago, a peaceful-minded gentleman, who probably never fired a pistol in his life, was pursuing his homeward way through one of the streets of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Suddenly he was accosted by a half intoxicated ruffian with, "Here, stop now! what have you got in your pocket?" "A three-barreled revolver," was the instant reply, "what have you got?" The drunken wretch turned, and rushed away without a word.

—Samuel Peabody, of New Hope, Cayuga county, New York, came to his death on the 6th instant in a singular manner. A set of scamps infest that village, who seem to have been in the habit of annoying him in various ways, putting old wagons and other articles on the roof of his shop, breaking his windows and obstructing the door. On the Sunday night previous they thrust a long pole down the chimney, fastening an old sleigh on the top. Mr. Peabody was engaged in removing it, when he fell from the roof to the ground, receiving mortal injury. He is said to have been a quiet, inoffensive old man.

—A countryman recently visited Paris, and had his pocekt picked. This so annoyed him (he was a Norman, the "Yankee" of France,) he determined to punish the next pickpocket who robbed him. He contrived a sort of slip-knot, which should arrest the thief's hand. While visiting the Louvre, he felt a pickpocket's hand in his pocket, and saw that he had caught the thief. He determined to enjoy his vengeance before delivering the rogue to the police. So he quietly walked from picture to picture, dragging the pickpocket after him, for the thief dare not say a word. He had enjoyed the rogue's torments for an hour, when he determined to deliver him to a policeman about thirty yards off. When he got near the policeman he turned round to collar his prisoner—there was nobody! The rogue had cut the Norman's coat tail and made off with it.

—A singular case of death from hanging occurred near Mahanoy City, Penn., recently. An infant, a few months old, was sleeping with its parents in bed. Awakening some time in the night, the mother missed her child. Raising herself to search for the babe, she discovered it hanging outside of the bed, suspended by the neck by the string of its nightcap caught on one of the pegs of the bed rail. Life was extinct. It seems that the child was accidentally sliding out of bed, and, as it passed over the bed rail, its clothing caught on one of the pegs by which the bed cord is attached, and thus suspended, it could give no cry by which the parents might have been awakened.

Nothing in Particular.

.....A Spanish gentleman, studying English, being at a tea party, and desiring to be helped to some sliced tongue, in doubt as to the term, hesitated a moment, and then said: "I will thank you, miss, to pass me that language!"

.....One of Gough's stories was a neat hit at those dilatory people who are behind time. Some one said to a person of this class, "I see that you belong to the three handed people." "Three handed; that's rather uncommon." "Oh no, common enough—two hands like other people—and a little behind hand!"

.....A friend of ours has a little four-year old urchin who has some "cute" ideas as well as funny ways of "putting" things. A few days since his mother found him in mischief, and said to him, "Why, L! what are you doing?" "Why, ma, don't get so nervous," was the calm, complacent response.

.....A clergyman on one occasion received no fee for marrying a parsimonious couple, and, meeting them several months after in a social gathering, took up the baby and exclaimed: "I believe I have a mortgage on this child!" Baby's father, rather than have an explanation before the company, quietly handed over a $5 bill.

.....Somebody says that advice is like the snow—the softer it falls the longer it dwells upon and the deeper it sinks into the mind.

THE Baraboo valley in Wisconsin bids fair to become as famous in a few years for grapes as it now is for hops. The farmers are cultivating the grape extensively.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

Training the Tomato.

In cultivating the tomato in large market gardens, the plants are usually pinched before their final transplanting, and they are then left to grow without any support, but in small gardens, not only is greater neatness observed by taking some pains to train the plants, but the fruit is improved both in quantity and quality. There are several methods of training. One of which, if not altogether the simplest is one of the neatest, is described by Mr. G. M. Childs, of Hancock county, Illinois. "As soon as the plants are large enough, transplant to rich, light soil, one in a hill, and at least five feet apart each way. At least once a week, scoop the earth away from around the plant and pour on a quart or more of soap suds. When the plant commences to branch, cut off the outer branches; this will have a tendency to increase the size of the stock and cause it to grow bushy. After the plants are sixteen to eighteen inches high, they should be provided with frames. I make mine by splitting standards from pine boards five and a half feet long, and sharpen their lower ends. To these standards are nailed slats made by sawing four feet laths into three pieces. The frames are made sixteen inches square, nailing the lower slats at fifteen inches from the bottom of the standards; the upper ones at the top, with others midway between the two. frames made in this way have been in use five years, and with little repairing will last some years longer. When the branches extend beyond the slats and over the top of the frame, clip them, leaving one leaf above the fruit stems, and continue to do this throughout the season. The plant trained thus and showing its ripe and ripening fruit, forms a most beautiful object, and one tomato grown in this way is worth a dozen as usually cultivated. Last year I had twenty-four plants, from which I gathered an abundance of fruit for table use and canning for a family of five persons, besides distributing from five to six bushels among my friends. No one need be afraid of using the knife freely, as there is no danger that the plant will not fruit abundantly. In my experience the difficulty has been to keep it from fruiting too much."—The Horticulturist.

Health in the Churches.

A healthy Christian is one who can work as well as eat. If there is a heavy load to carry in Christ's cause, he takes to it at once. If there is a wall to build, he is the man to lift the big stones. If some one has to go into the storm, and endure pelting opposition, who so able to bear it as his broad breast and brawny arm? A man that loves Christ loves work. A dyspeptic Christian dreads work. A lazy Christian shirks it. What a hospital is many a church! Here lies one poor man down with a paralysis of faith. Here is another laid up by a sprain which he got by a sudden fall into temptation. Here is one whom fever of passion has burned out; he looks hardly worth the medicine to cure him. Alas for another, he is under pastoral treatment for the blindness of unbelief—whose gaping wounds reveals the spot where Satan's fiery dart went in! A revival commonly clears the Church hospital. But a long period of spiritual declension crams it to the door-way. Oh what need that he who went through Galilee, healing all manner of diseases, should come into some churches, whose atmosphere is loaded with the effluvia of incipient putrefaction!—Family Treasury.

Economy of Mowing Machines.

A gentleman of experience gives as his opinion that a good mowing machine will save a farmer on an average, one eighth of his crop of grass, aside from the fact that "haying is done" much sooner, and thereby a great saving must be made. He says the average height of grass is about sixteen inches, and that a machine mows an average, two inches closer than the scythe, thus saving two inches of grass over the whole surface. If a man cuts forty tons of hay with a mowing machine, he saves five tons of hay, as he would not have got but thirty-five tons with the scythe. Calling hay worth, upon the average, $8 per ton, there is a saving of $40 a year in hay, to say nothing of labor. Thus the price of the mowing machine is saved in three years—no inconsiderable item. But this is a small item when compared with the saving in labor and "the wear and tear of the disposition" in swinging the scythe through a hot forenoon. Commend us to the mower, as a labor saving machine over all others invented for the use of the farmer.

DEFINITIONS NOT IN WEBSTER.—Buss, to kiss again; pluribus, to kiss without regard to sex; sillibus, to kiss the hand instead of the lips; blunderbus, to kiss the wrong person; omnibus, to kiss all the persons in the room; crebus, to kiss in the dark. Evidently, the country girl who went down to the city recently had these definitions in her mind. A young gentleman was to escort her some distance through the town, and not wishing to walk, remarked: "Hold on Mary, let's take a bus;" but Mary, blushing to the eyebrows, drew back, and with wounded modesty, replied: "Oh, George, not right here in the street."

"THE BLUES."—An exchange paper says there is no excuse for having the blues. It tells how to be free from them. This is the prescription: Visit the hovels of the poverty-stricken, and tender them all the assistance in your power. Depend upon it, such noble enjoyment will warm your heart, and cause your blood to course freely and warmly through stagnant veins. Charity expands the human soul, gives a generous color to the faded cheek, fills the dull eye with the lustre and brilliancy of benevolence, causes the sluggish gait to become elastic, drives away the hypochondriacal spirits, and gives buoyancy to the whole body. Try.

—The Pope has uttered a double prophecy. At a ceremony held in the Chapel of Palazzo Massimo, in commemoration of a miracle which, according to a Roman legend, was performed by St. Philip, who raised from the dead a youth of the family of Massimo, a select party was present, chiefly belonging to the high clerical or legitimist noblesse. His Holiness made a brief speech in an inspired and prophetic tone, and spoke of the future, says the report, as if from the impression of second sight. He said that the present year would be one of triumph and of brilliant victory over the enemies of the temporal power. "I shall" he remarked, "behold the triumph, and, in 1868, I shall render up my soul to God." This singular prophecy is said to have produced a powerful effect on the audience, some of whom were moved to tears.

THE Lewiston (Me.) Journal says a gentleman living in Auburn last year raised $1,900 worth of garden plants and vegetables on about one acre of land, and this year he will, if ordinarily successful, get $3,000 worth from the same land.

THE LAMB KNITTING MACHINE—We call attention to the advertisement of the Lamb Knitting Machine—a most valuable invention. The editor of the N. W. Christian Advocate has seen it turn out a stocking in about five minutes, narrowing the toe, forming the heel, and widening for the calf in a beautiful manner. It knits shawls, hoods, underclothing, &c., in a beautiful manner and with great rapidity. It is one of the most complete labor savers ever invented

This has been a sickly season. The medical faculty prophesy evil in the future. They think pestilence is on the wing for America. Suppose this to be true, what is the best defense against it? REDOUBLED NERVOUS VIGOR. This is the only protection against PANIC, as well as against the PRINCIPLE OF INFECTION. Why do not those who predict the epidemic propose an adequate preventive? There IS one; a tonic, nervine and alterative, competent to shield the system against the subtle elements of disease, whether they float hither on the winds from distant lands, or rise like vapor from our own soil, or are incorporated with the universal fluid. This ONE PREVENTIVE, of which there is no duplicate among the compounds either of the Old World or the New, is

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS.

Remember that it is a specific for all the complaints which lay the system open to visitations of deadly epidemics. If you are dyspeptic, it renews the vigor of your digestive organs, gives you appetite, and restores your cheerfulness. If you are nervous, it invigorates every fibre of your nervous system, from the base of the brain, where it begins, to the extremities, where it terminates. If you are bilious, it disciplines your unruly liver and brings the action of that organ into harmony with the laws of health. It is, in short, an invigorant and alterative so powerful, that Nature, with Hostetter's Bitters for her ally, may bid defiance to native malaria and foreign infection. If this enemy we hear of, this disease which is desolating Europe, is really bound hitherward, it behooves the prudent to put on their armor, to clothe themselves with invulnerability as far as human means will permit, by preparing the system for resistance with this pure vegetable antidote.

REMARKABLE CURE OF STIFF KNEE BY ALCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER.—How many persons, from stepping on a piece of orange peel, have been lamed for life. A case which might have been of this kind has just been brought to our notice. A gentleman, from placing the heel of his boot on a piece of orange peel, was suddenly thrown down, and violently strained his knee. He was six months confined to his bed, though he had the best medical advice. As a last resort a very eminent physician was called in to see if anything more could be done. After examination he said, "My opinion is, your knee will never be bent again." He recommended that the whole leg and knee should be encased in a plaster of Paris bandage, which would accelerate the permanent stiffening of the knee, and said, "the sooner it was done the better." But the patient, before trying this application and having a stiff knee for life, enveloped it in our Porous Plasters, and in less than two months his knee was perfectly cured.

SERVED HIM RIGHT.—DR. SWAIN recently prosecuted a party for vending Bitters under names and labels so nearly like his own as to deceive the public. Judge Williams charged the jury that, as it was proven that DR. SWAIN had built up an honorable reputation for his goods, the defendant had no more right to use trade marks or labels designed to deceive the public by their similarity to his than he would have to steal any other property. The jury convicted the base impostor. Served him right.

DR. THOMAS ANDERSON of Pennsylvania writes that he uses Dr. Bell's Golden Tonic Bitters extensively in his practice and finds them a much better tonic and stimulent than anything he can prescribe for his patients. DR. VELPAU'S FRENCH PILLS.

Ladies, take Particular Notice.

THE REAL VELPAU FEMALE PILL.

[WARRANTED FRENCH.]

THESE PILLS, so celebrated many years ago in Paris for the relief of female irregularities, and afterward so notorious for their criminal employment in the practice of abortion, are now offered for sale for the first time in America. They have been kept in comparative obscurity from the fact that the originator, Dr. Velpau, is a physician in Paris of great wealth and strict conscientious principles, and has withheld them from general use, lest they should be employed for unlawful purposes. In overcoming Female Obstructions, Falling of the Womb, Whites, Green Sickness, Suppression, Retention, or Immoderate Flow of the Monthly Discharges, they seem to be truly omnipotent, bursting open the flood-gates from whatever cause may have stopped them; but they are offered to the public only for legitimate uses, and all agents are forbidden to sell them when it is understood that the object is unlawful. Married ladies should never take them when there is any reason to believe themselves pregnant, for they will be sure to produce a miscarriage.

These pills are entirely safe under all circumstances, being composed entirely of substances from the vegetable kingdom.

Each box has the coat of arms for the City of Paris stamped on the box, with the words "Trade Mark" in French, to counterfeit which is a misdemeanor, and all persons will be dealt with according to law.

☞ Full directions accompany every box. Ladies can obtain a box sealed from the eyes of the curious, by inclosing One Dollar and six post-office stamps to any respectable druggists, or to O. G. STAPLES, General Agent for the United States, Watertown, N. Y.

THE CELEBRATION.

A citizens meeting was held in Bidwell's Hall on Monday evening last, to make arrangements for a celebration on the coming Fourth. The meeting was quite well attended. Remarks were made by several gentlemen present and several plans were proposed and discussed. A committee of three from the town of Franklin were present, and extended an invitation to Tecumseh to assist them in a celebration in Franklin this year. But as Tecumseh was a more central location and as Franklin had given us the cold shoulder last year, the meeting thought best to decline. A general executive committee, of seven was appointed, which is to have the whole charge of the matter, appoint sub-commi tees, procure a speaker and make all necessary arrangements.—The following are the name of the committee.

Gen. Joseph Brown, G. T. Ketcham, Dr. W. G. Fisher, W. H. Gray, Dr Heath Abe Pelham, J. Davidson.

Let us all take hold with a hearty good will and get up a Celebration that shall be worthy of the occasion.

Tuesday evening the general committee had a meeting arranged a programme of exercises and appointed committees.—The following committees were organized, and members selected for part of them. For the balance a chairman only was chosen, who was empowered to appoint such others to assist him as he might see fit.

ATTENTION FARMERS!—At a Sheep Shearing Festival, held at the place of Jesse Warner Esq., in the township of York, Washtenaw Co., on the 2d day of June 1866, the following Sheep were brought in from the townships of York, Saline, Macon and Milan, and sheared, and the weight of each Sheep and fleece given opposite the owners name as follows:

Nearly all those Sheep were within two miles of the above place.

In addition to the above entertainment, the ladies had prepared a most sumptuous repast, which was worthy of Kings and Queens to partake of, whereby one hundred and fifty persons were very much regaled.

Come all ye fellow farmers, let's hear what you're about, come advertise your doings, and then we'll find you out,
We want to hear from you, if you'll with us compete,
For we live down in the low-land, and we think we're hard to beat.

The time was, when the people thought the sun revolved around the earth, and that the earth was stationary and flat, that all the Kingdoms of the earth could be seen from the top of a high mountain! And the time was, when Wolves roamed over this peninsula supreme. And the time was, when "African Slavery" was popular in the United States of America. And the time was, when farmers had to take a back seat, and give room for the finer cloth.

But, the time is now, in the 10th century, that the Sun stands still on Mount Gibeon or some other place, and the earth is round and revolves on its axis, and that all the Kingdoms of the earth cannot be seen from one stand point, and that Sheep have taken the place of Wolves in Michigan, and that American Slavery is one of the things of the past. And the time is that farmers are leaving the back seat and taking their place in the front rank, and standing up for their rights like men! The world moves, most asuredly. FROM MANY FARMERS.

Communication.

"Awake thou that sleepest,"
"Let brevity despatch the rapid thought."

About three months since the readers of the Herald were thereby informed of the election in this village of a President, Recorder and four Trustees, with whom as the Common Council, the law places the execution of the local Executive, Legislative and Judicial powers needed for the safety and good government of this village and of the inhabitants thereof. The election of the subordinate officers of the village was also then announced.

But the people have not been told whether any or all of these officers have taken and filed their official oaths, and entered upon the performance of the duties of their office; nor do they know that the Common Council have convened or do convene to exercise their high powers. They have not informed the people by timely public notice of the time and place of their meetings, so that grievances and requsts can be presented to them by their constituents. All we know of their existence and doings is what has been published in the Herald, which is a very limited statement of what ought to have been done.

The warm weather is approaching The Cholera, that terrible pestilence so much dreaded by all, and especially to be feared by the filthy and intemperate, is in the United States, and will soon commence its distructive journey through our land. This village remains without any general Sanitary measures being adopted. The inebriate and drunkards are still seen in our streets. The liquor sellers, in the Saloons, Taverns and other secret places, are actively operating for the robbery and destruction of the inhabitants of this village and its vicinity

When are the men who have sworn to see that the laws are faithfully executed?—Where sleeps the power which is to be exercised for the safety and good government of this village and of the inhabitants thereof?

We thank you for the cheering hopes you have given us, in the last Herald, that the proceedings of the Common Council are to be published therein. All may have been secretly tending to bring about the desired results; and the depositories of these important functions may yet openly exercise them for the public good. They may congratulate themselves on the administrative shrewdness, and assure their friends.

"We do our work as out of sight
As Stars by day and Suns by night."

This apology will not satisfy the people, and is uncongenial to our notions of a republican government, though we cheerfully admit that the word knows little of the value of the labors of its greatest men. Their works, unseen, silent and unobtrusive, like the most beneficient operations of nature, are known and appreciated only by their effects on society. S.

Tecumseh, June 8th, 1866.

The venerable Mrs. Partington once asked us if we believed that everything was foreordaind before hand in advance, we were compelled to answer that sometimes we did and sometimes we did'nt. She remarked that her son Isaac says he knows one thing shur and that is that the J. Mon. Roe Taylor Gold Medal Soap will supersede and run out every other kind of soap made. The old lady further remarked that she believed so too, and was sure there was no other as good for she had tried it.

THE BIRD'S QUESTION.

[Whittier to Our Young Folks.]

Behind me at our evening meal
The gray bird sat on his sill,
Swung downward by a single claw,
And wiped his hooked bill.

He shook his wings and crimson tail,
And set his head astant,
And, in his sharp, impatient way,
Asked, "What does Charlie want?"

"Fie, silly bird!" I answered, "tuck
Your head beneath your wing
And go to sleep, — but ever and o'er
He asked the self-same thing.

Then, smiling to myself, I said:
How like are men and birds!
We are all saying what he says
In action or in words.

And so I sometimes think our prayers
Might well be merged in one;
And rest and peace and hearth and church
Repeat, "Thy will be done."

LIGHT.

Modes of Producing Artificial Lights.

From the Scientific American.

Prof. Doremas, an eminent chemist of New York, is now delivering a course of lectures in this city. At his second entertainment, after speaking of the natural light of the sun, the modes of producing artificial lights were discussed at length. All these are various plans of heating some solid body to a very high temperature. Gases, however highly heated, emit very little light. When any substance is burned, if the product is wholly and immediately gaseous, little light is produced; while if the product of combustion is solid, the burning is accompanied by a great production of light. To illustrate this, some sulphur was burned in a jar of pure oxygen gas; the product of combustion in this case is a gas-sulphurous acid—and the flame was very dull. A coil of iron wire was then heated at the end and plunged into a jar of oxygen, when it burned with scintillations so brilliant that they were painful to the eyes. The lecturer explained that the product of combustion was a solid—the oxide of iron—and he called attention to the fact that the jar was reddened by the fumes. The bottom of the jar contained a bed of sand, covered by water to a depth of five or six inches, and as the white-hot pellets of the oxide of iron dropped into the water they continued red hot until they reached the bottom. In explanation it was stated that each pellet on entering the water immediately became surrounded by an atmosphere of steam, which preserved it from contact with the liquid.

OUR COMMON LIGHTS.

All our light in ordinary use comes from intensely heated carbon—generally by burning carbon in connection with hydrogen. Illuminated gas is carbureted hydrogen, and the products of its combustion are steam and carbonic acid. As both of these are gases, how is it that great light is produced—light being emitted in any considerable quantity only from solids? We may burn gas so that the flame will be very dull; it is necessary only to mingle it, before burning, thoroughly with air, so that combustion will take place throughout the volume. When it is burned from a jet in the usual way, the combustion goes on only on the outside of the issuing stream, and the hydrogen is burned first, thus decomposing the gas, and leaving the carbon momentarily in the solid state. This solid carbon is highly heated by the flame, and from it, while in this condition, is emitted nearly all the light of the jet. So soon as the hot carbon passes outward from the body of the flame and comes in contact with the air, it also is burned, combining with the oxygen of the atmosphere to form carbonic acid.

THE CALCIUM LIGHT.

When hydrogen and oxygen gases are burned together, though the heat is not the most intense of any that man can produce with the single exception of the electric current, the product of the combustion being water, in the gaseous form of steam, the light emitted is very feeble, but if into the flame we introduce any solid which will remain solid at the intense heat of the flame, it glows with a dazzling light. Nearly all solid substances are either fused or evaporated by the oxy-hydrogen flame, but there are a few that will resist even its intense heat, and the most convenient of these is lime. As lime is the oxyde of the metal calcium, the light thus produced is called the calcium light.

Two calcium lights, prepared by Dr. Grant of New York, a man who makes a business of exhibiting them, were then lighted, and the parabolic reflectors were slowly turned around, so as to throw the parallel beam into different parts of the house. It was curious to see the universal dropping of heads, or raising of hats and handkerchiefs to shield the eyes from the intolerable brilliancy of the shining bits of lime.

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT.

If a piece of zinc and a piece of platinum be partially immersed in a vessel of diluted sulphuric acid, and their outer ends be connected by a metallic rod or other conductor of electricity, the zinc is gradually oxidized, and at the same time a current of electricity starts from the zinc plate, passes through the fluid to the copper, and thence flows around through the metallic rod to the zinc again. This was discovered by Dr. Volta, an Italian physicist, and is therefore called a voltaic circle.

If the metallic rod be of sufficient size to freely conduct all the electricity generated, no heat or light is emitted; but if one portion of the rod be made so small that the whole current cannot pass, then this small portion is heated, and if it be made sufficiently hot, light is produced. If the heated rod be of a metal which at a high temperature has a strong affinity for oxygen, it will of course, be rapidly consumed, but a platinum wire may thus be kept glowing for many hours.

Upon the front of the stage was an apparatus having a point of carbon connected with one pole of a powerful voltaic battery, while with the opposite pole was connected a wheel with radiating spokes, the several spokes being armed with different kinds of metals. This wheel was turned so as to bring the copper spoke in connection with the carbon point, and was then slightly withdrawn so as to make a short break in the circuit between the carbon and copper. Both were quickly heated to a high temperature, and the copper was burned with a dazzling green flame. Iron, zinc, and other metals were consumed in the same way.

Finally, the spoke of the wheel bearing a carbon point was turned in contact with its fellow carbon of the opposite pole, and then slightly withdrawn, when the space between the two was instantly spanned by the arch of the electric light; before the unequaled brilliancy of its glow, the gas jets of the Academy became of a yellow, sickly hue, and the two calcium lights "paled their ineffectual fires."

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT UNDER WATER.

To show that the light was produced, not by the combustion of the carbon, but by its being intensely heated, the light was exhibited in a vacuum. The points were so arranged that they could be covered by a bell-glass, the air was then exhausted by an air pump, and when the connection was made, the same brilliant effects followed.

The points were also connected in a jar of water, but this had the effect somewhat to dim the light.

The lecturer explained that the light comes mainly from intensely heated particles of carbon, which are carried over by the current from the positive to the negative electrode—wasting away the power of the former and increasing the size of the latter.

A MONOCHROMATIC LIGHT.

The large, shallow, leaden tank in front of the stage had been covered to the depth of an inch with salt—the chloride of sodium. This was now sprinkled with about two gallons of alcohol from a watering pot, and the alcohol was set on fire. The colorless flame of the alcohol received a single yellow hue from the sodium of the salt. The gas lights had been previously turned down, and as the yellow ray of the salted flame fell upon the face of the lecturer, his countenance ceased to send forth the colors of life, and became of a cadaverous aspect; the same strange change came also upon the looks of the audience, and the great Academy seemed to be filled with the faces of the dead.

THE MAGNESIUM LIGHT.

While the lights were turned down, a coil of magnesium wire was lighted. As the pure, white light of this flame is made up of all the blended rays of the sunbeam, when it fell upon the faces of the people, their ghastly hue was changed, as by a miracle, for the glow of life and health.

ALL LIGHT ORIGINALLY FROM THE SUN.

In conclusion, the lecturer remineed his audience that as our ordinary lights are obtained by burning carbon, and as this carbon has been separated in the leaves of vegetables from the redundant carbonic acid of the atmosphere by the decomposing force of the sunbeam, it is the statement of a fact to say that all our light comes originally from the sun.

General Sherman.

One cannot help be amused at the half humorous way in which, though the havoc of war is visible on every side, Southern people refer their individual losses, and the disjointed state of things generally, to "Mr. Sherman," as they call him. One man has a piece of town property to sell, and another asks:

"What improvements?"

"None but the improvements made by Mr. Sherman."

Or it is a plantation he wants to sell:

"Gin-houses did you say?"

"No; there was, but Mr. Sherman you know——"

"Dwelling?"

"No; Mr. Sherman——"

"Is there a bridge over the creek?"

"No; Mr. Sherman——"

"Is there a grist-mill near your place?"

"No; Mr. Sherman——"

Or you walk the streets with some new acquaintance, and remark the huge shot-holes in so many houses.

"Yes; Mr. Sherman——"

"Well, you know, Mr. Sherman."

The popular idea of Sherman is of a being in whom are combined the fantastic and the terrible; a man with the courage of Hector, the activity of a harlequin, the sleeplessness of a weasel, the persistence and power of a steam-engine, and the fury of the "dread Chimera." They believe that he lives on brandy and curses, and swears and gives orders day and night. "Sleep!" said a man at whose house the General made his headquarters; "I tell you I don't believe the man ever sleeps." To them General Sherman is like "Folker, the Fiddler," told about in the "Nieblungen Leid," the scraping of whose mighty fiddle stick set everything about him to dancing in fire and blood. "Grant," they say, "is a regular old pounder and a gentleman; but Sherman——. Oh, Sherman is just——well, he is just Sherman!"

If their idea of Sherman is distorted and unjust, their ideas of other men and manners generally in the North are far more so, and keep many a Southern man, who might otherwise be a desirable neighbor, in a fever of hate.—Correspondence.

A Pair of Fools.

In these days of swindling Gift Enterprises, when experience is about the only harvest of the investment, the following note will be read with interest:

Some years ago, when all the world were mad upon the lotteries, the cook of a middle aged gentlemen drew from his hands the savings of some years. Her master curious to know the cause, learned that she had repeatedly dreamed that a certain number was a great prize, and she had bought it. He called her a fool for her pains, and never omitted an occasion to tease her upon the subject. One day, however, the master saw in the newspapers, or at his bookseller's country seat, that the number was actually the $20,000 prize. Cook was called up, a palaver ensues; had known each other for years, loth to part, &c, in short, he proposed, and is accepted; insists on marriage being celebrated next morning. Married they were, and as the carriage took them from the church they enjoyed the following dialogue.

"Well, Molly—two happy events in one day. You have married, I trust, a good husband. You have something else—but first let me ask you where have you locked up your lottery ticket?"

She, thinking that her master was only bantering her upon the old point, cried—

"Don't ye say no more about it. I thought how it would be, and that I never should hear the end on't, so I sold it to the baker of our village for a guinea profit; so you need never be angry with me again about that."

THE FIRST BABY.—What fools some people are over their first baby! Mamma will pinch him, just to hear the dear little darlin' cry. Pappy would let the dear little creature pull his whiskers until he (papa) was blue. Mamma insists on stuffing baby with cake, until the darlin' can't walk; and as soon as mamma and papa hears the sweet little dear groan, the immediately come to the conclusion that baby is going to die, and send for a half-dozen doctors without delay.

Mamma insists on getting baby's shoes two sizes too small for baby's feet, for the purpose of keeping the dear little darlin's footins from growing out of shape, and the consequence is baby can't stand up, and therefore falls down, and cuts his dear little lip on the stove. Mamma immediately faints, and papa runs for the doctor, and when he returns he finds mamma in a state of hysterics, and the baby in the middle of the floor, with the spit-box upset in his dear, darlin' little lap.

Mamma insists that baby can say papa! and tries to get him to do so in the presence of her friends. Baby doesn't feel in the humor just then, but after everybody has forgotten mamma's request, baby commences as follows: "Bub—lub—bleb—ba!" when mamma immediately snatches him, and commences to kiss him violently. After she gets through that delightful operation, everybody is surprised to hear her exclaim: "Oh! my dear child, I knew he was going to die soon! he is too smart to live! Just to think of his age—only a year and two months old, and him saying "papa" already as plain as he does! Oh! I know he won't live—it is impossible. I do wish papa was here. I ought to send for the doctor immediately."

Doctor comes, feels the dear little darlin's pulse, recommends quiet, charges $2.50, takes his hat and leaves with a smile.

DEAREST, COME KISS ME.—A Western paper publishes a poem commencing:

Dearest, come kiss me; my lips are yet warm,
And my bosom still pants from the clasp of thy arm;
The blood dashes wildly through each throbbing vein;
But I droop, oh! I droop for thy kisses again.

To which a very "fresh" young gentleman very promptly replied:

Jee-rooss-a-lem! dearest, I dart like a fish;
My lips shall with kisses respond to thy wish;
I'll check not the blood thrilling wild in each vein;
But I'll stop thee from drooping for kisses again.

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK.

General Intelligence.

The trial of Jeff Davis has finally been postponed until the first Tuesday in October.

Dr. Andrews made a second and most successful ascent in New York city, on the 6th. He can sail with or against the wind.

The House Utah Committee will report against admitting Utah as a State. Some of them favor a military government.

The recent order of the Secretary of the Navy adds an increase of one third to the pay of all officers of the navy, with a few exceptions named therein.

The Supreme Court for the District of Columbia has decided that the act of Congress retro-ceding Alexandria county, Va., from the District was unconstitutional.

It is generally understood that the head of the coming Colonial Confederation will be Lord Monck, now Governor-General of Canada. He will bear the title of Viceroy.

A bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives to create a territorial government for the region west of Arkansas, now known as the Indian territory. The bill assigns to the territory the name of Lincoln.

The House Committee on Public Lands, under lead of their chairman, Hon. G. W. Julian, seems intent upon the arriving at some tangible conclusion, concerning tree planting on the woodless plains, which is attracting such wide spread mention. They have asked for a report on this subject from the Agricultural Department, also from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as to the character of an Indian College in Kansas, which proposes to plant 10,000 acres of experimental forests within five years.

The inauguration of the third attempt to lay the Atlantic cable is fixed for the 14th of July next. Besides the Great Eastern, three other vessels have been fitted with cutting and holding grapnels, to lift the west end of the 1,200 miles of cable laid last year, and now resting in perfect electrical condition on the bed of the ocean. Only 600 miles is needed to connect this with the coast of Newfoundland, and this the ships will carry; while the Great Eastern will lay a cable for another entirely new and separate line, to be laid from the start. Improved apparatus assist the enterprise.

The Department of State has received from the United States Consul at the island of Zanzibar, intelligence of the failure of the East African expedition, which was fitted out from that place in the year 1865, for the purpose of exploring the northern rivers, which were found to be only inlets of the sea. The expedition touched at Cape Bissell. Here, after considerable opposition, the party finally landed, but every obstacle was placed in their way by the natives to prevent their further ingress into the country.

Fenians.

The Canadian Parliament on the 8th, by unanimous vote, passed a bill suspending the writ of habeas corpus.

Gen. Sweeny has been released from arrest after giving bail to the amount of $25,000 to appear for trial.

A fire on South Water St., Chicago, on the 9th, destroyed property to the amount of $200,000. The Pennsylvania Oil Company are among the largest losers.

Murphy, the leader of the Canadian Fenians, has been put into the citadel at Quebec. Two Fenian officials at Cleveland have been arrested by the Federal authorities.

There is a report that the majority of the Cabinet are in favor of the release of Jeff. Davis on bail, the amount of security required being $200,000.

The New York Herald, of whose reliability the public can best judge, has the news that a Fenian privateer recently sailed from New York, intending to capture a Cunard steamer.

Gen. Sweeny, at St. Albans, "President" Roberts in New York, and Gen. Lynch and John T. Scanlon in Chicago, have been arrested by the United States officials, charged with violation of the neutrality laws. Gen. Spear concealed himself.

An order has been issued forbidding transportation on public conveyances to Fenians, on their way to violate the neutrality laws, and prohibiting telegraphic dispatches in cypher from Fenians to each other, or on Fenian business.

The Fenians, it seems, did cross the Canadian line (not the St. Lawrence river, however), on the 7th, and encamped 11 miles over the border. The news that the movement had been abandoned, and the Fenians were returning home is, however, later than this.

The President has issued a proclamation warning all citizens of the United States against taking part in, or aiding or countenancing, an invasion of the British Provinces; exhorting all United States officers to employ their authority to prevent and defeat such a proceeding, and to arrest all persons engaged therein; and empowering General Meade to employ the land and naval forces of the United States, and the militia, to prevent the setting on foot and carrying on of such an invasion.

The latest and apparently most reliable intelligence is to the effect that, the entire movement has been abandoned, and leaders and men are returning home. Great bitterness is manifested towards the United States Government, for its action in defeating their ends. Meetings were held in New York on the 7th, in which President Johnson was freely denounced, and it was declared that the Irish people would not support him hereafter. It was also said that persons in the United States uniform were acting as British spies.

Gen. Malone, in command of the advance guard of the Fenians telegraphs as follows:

"PIGEON HILL, C. E., June 9.—We are in the enemy's country. The flag waves defiantly. We have captured Pigeon Hill, St. Armand Centre, and Slab City, and the British colors. We are ready to advance. Hurry up the ammunition. Victory or death. Growlers and cowards have gone to the rear. They will talk about our position, but don't mind them. The tried men of nerve are at the front.

The President has issued, through the Attorney General, an order to U. S. District Attorneys and Marshals, "to arrest all leaders and conspicuous persons known as Fenians," who have been, or are about to be guilty of the violation of the neutrality laws.

Head Centre Stevens asserts that he has been betrayed and deceived by both wings of the Fenian organization.

The tremendous hurricane which passed over Augusta, Ga., on the 6th, unroofed many dwelling houses and tore up trees by the roots. A school house was entirely destroyed, by which seven children were killed and ten wounded. The hurricane devastated a track of fifty miles wide across the whole State.

Heavy rains have opened new crevasses in the Mississippi and Red rivers. Alexandria is overflowed, and details of the affair are heartrending. People are driven to rafts for protection, and an immense amount of property is destroyed. No relief is possible until the flood subsides. Great injury has been done to the crops of Texas by the flood.

In a bar-room difficulty at Owensboro, Ky., May 31st, a man named Goodman was attacked by several persons at once. He drew his revolver and shot three men. McAlister was shot dead, Barkwell was shot in the breast and will die, and Wm. Brown was seriously wounded in the leg. Goodman packed his clothes, settled with his employer, and left town. He has not been arrested, as yet.

The levee at Alexandria, La., gave way on the morning of the 31st ult., about two o'clock, above and below the Ice House, submerging the whole town and vicinity, and causing great damage to property. The Frolic left Alexandria at two o'clock P. M. on the same day. At that time there was from three to five feet of water over the whole town and suburbs.

The Senators and Representatives elect from Florida publish a letter to the Chairman of the Reconstruction Committee, saying that their State, in the Convention and Legislature since the war closed, has acted loyally, and they say they believe impartial justice will be administered to all colored people by the State Government, and if extraneous influences are withdrawn, the two races will live in peace and harmony. There are no serious animosities existing between the people on account of the late war, but all are quiet and anxious for the reorganization of industrial interests, and desirous to cultivate friendly relations among themselves, and with the people of other States.

A singular affair recently came to light in Brownsville, Texas. William Rogers of the 77th Ohio Volunteers, was under sentence of death for killing an Assistant Surgeon of his regiment. The gallows was erected and all preparations made, the prisoner received religious consolation and expressed his readiness to die, but during the night preceding the day for execution, he managed to effect a mysterious disappearance. It was positively asserted that he had joined the contra-guerillas in Matamoras, and was flourishing in grand style about the streets of that town; but a few days ago he was captured almost within prison limits, having lived for twenty-eight days in a subterranean abode, dug out by his own hands, within easy hearing distance of guards, sentinels &c. He was freeing himself from his gopher hole when retaken.

The dwelling of J. M. Todd, at Hawley's Point, Lee county, Ill., was struck by lightning on Saturday last. Mr. Todd, wife and three children were in the house, and severely, if not fatally shocked.

Several steamers have gone into "summer quarters" at Cincinnati. The papers of that city say it takes three or four weeks for a boat to get a load, and then the freight paid would hardly keep the chambermaid in cologne water.

C. B. Kinsley, head centre of the Rockford (Ill.) Fenians, got into a row with John Donoughey at Rockford, and was shot in the leg and hand and beat over the head with a pistol till he was nearly killed. There was an old feud between them.

A well known citizen of St. Paul named Perry Sloan, fell from a window in the fourth story of the Merchant's Hotel, on Sunday morning, the 3d, and was instantly killed. The jury attributed the fall to a fit of delirium produced by drinking.

A prize fight at St. Louis occurred on the 3d, between Crowley Davis of Pittsburgh, and Mike Donovan of Chicago. After fighting fifty-nine rounds, in two hours and two minutes, the contest was decided in favor of Davis, Donovan having made a "foul."

This makes three of the number now secured. The other two are still at large.

The Berlin (Wis.) Courant reports the death of Dr. G. R. Swetting, from the effects of a slight puncture in the finger with a needle, received while sewing up a body after a post mortem examination. No attention was given the wound at first, and when it began to excite alarm none of the remedies applied were of any avail.

Henry Shaw of St. Louis has proposed to present the city with nearly 200 acres of land for a public park, on condition that the city spend $20,000 to $30,000 each year in improving and adorning it. The land is valued at $400,000. He is the same Shaw who had the great breach of promise suit a few years ago, in which Miss Effie Carstang was plaintiff.

On the night of the 6th, while the alarm of the burning of Eastman's Business College in Chicago was being sounded, a locomotive on the Burlington and Quincy Railroad, moving at the rate of fifteen miles an hour, struck the horses and forward wheels of a steam fire engine, upsetting it, killing one man outright, mortally injuring another, and bruising several others. The horses were instantly killed. The jury have censured the railroad company for not keeping a flagman at the crossing, night as well as day.

Eight members of the family of Mr. Bermer, a merchant of Marion, Iowa, were taken sick four weeks ago with trichinæ; two of them died on the 3d. The pork eaten was sugar-cured ham sliced up and served raw like chipped beef. It was partaken of four weeks since. The first symptoms were those of diarrhœa followed by fever of a slightly thphoid type, with acute pains in the muscles. The death agonies are described as terrible.

Eastern Matters.

Probst, the murderer of the Deering family, was executed on the 8th. But few spectators were present, including only six reporters from the city papers.

An entire family was poisoned in Albany by eating unwholesome and immature veal. One of the children has already died, and the balance of the family are in a critical condition.

Pickpockets enjoyed a golden harvest at West Point on Friday, on the occasion of General Scott's funeral. Many distinguished characters were releived of money and valuables. Gen. Grant, it is stated, lost his watch, and Schuyler Colfax his purse.

Miss Bridget McGowan was burned to death at Attica, New York, last Friday. She had kindled the fire about five o'clock in the morning, and as it did not burn as readily as she wished, she took up the coal oil can, which contained about half a gallon of the fluid, and was pouring it upon the fire when the can exploded, and the woman's clothing was instantly in flames from head to foot.

Financial and Commercial.

The national debt is $2,799,979,450 76.

The gold crop of the world will probably reach $110,000,000 this year. Previous to 1830 the annual yield was less than $34,000,000.

A New York party lately had to fork over $1,339,86 for neglecting to affix 14 cents worth of revenue stamps to a money receipt.

The Secretary of the Treasury received from two sources, on the 6th, $1,570 in conscience money,—the parties saying that they owed it to the Treasury.

The supreme court of the United States has decided that a disbursing officer of the goverment cannot charge commissions on his disbursements.

A letter from Frankfort-on-the-Main says large quantities of U. S. 5-20s may be expected in June, owing to a general apprehension of war on the continent. Persons who purchased the bonds as a permanent investment are now anxious to realize, and are flooding banking houses in the principal cities of Germany with them. He estimates that seventy-five millions worth of the bonds will be returned to America within the next thirty days.

The cost of coining the new five cent piece will be about twenty per cent. of its full value, while the paper note of the same denomination costs to print about one-fiftieth of its full value.

Nearly every month a batch of new counterfeits of compound-interest or legal tender notes and of the fractional currency is announced. Peterson's Detector for June gives the following list of recent issues:

100s counterfeit are in circulation.—A fac simile of the genuine bill, but the engraving is not so fine. They are dated May 15th, 1865; letter B. The green ink on the back on the counterfeit is paler than that on the gennine. Be careful and examine well all before taking them, as they have deceived some of our best judges.

U. S. Legal Tender, Greenbacks.—5s, a new issue and very well done. The only prominent defect is heavier shading around the words "United States" in the title. The counterfeit is about one-eighth of an inch shorter than the genuine.

Counterfeit Postal Currency, new issue—Fifty cent notes, new issue. On the top of the bill, the words "Furnished only by the Assistant Treasurer and Designated Depositaries of the United States," observe the two words "of the;" on the genuine there is a little space between them, not so on the imitation.

Fifty-cent notes; the engraving is good, but the gilt frame around the head is very bad. The paper has, however, the appearance of common print paper, and is very whitish. The whole of it is a little smaller than the genuine. Six barrels on right end of Washington are very indistinct.

Twenty-five cent notes, new issue, very dark, poorly engraved.

Twenty-five cent notes, poorly engraved, on poor paper, and the gilt head around the paper don't show any gilt.

Trials of a Poetess.

Mrs. Sigourney at one time kept a statement of the requisitions made on her versifying talent, examples of which she has given in her autobiography. The following will illustrate their character:

The owner of a canary bird, which has accidentally been starved to death, wishes some elegiac verses.

A stranger, whose son died at the age of nine months, "weighing just thirteen pounds, would be glad of some poetry to be framed, glazed and hung over the chimney-piece to keep the other children from forgetting him."

A father requests elegiac verses on a young child, supplying as the only suggestion of the tuneful muse, the fact that he was unfortunately "drowned in a barrel of swill."

A funeral hymn for a minister when he should die, he being now well and preaching as usual.

Epistle from a stranger, saying his wife was likely to die and had a young babe, and wishing some poetry to be written in such a way that it should answer for mother and child, should both be taken by death.

The Constitutional Amendment

Cure for Hydrophobia.

Some time ago, Mr. James Garth Marshall, of Leeds, published a cure, or, rather, preventive of hydrophobia, which may, perhaps, be usefully repeated at the present moment. Mr. Marshall, having seen in print a French method of treatment of the disease, wrote to his family physician in London, one of the most eminent members of the faculty, to inquire whether it was to be relied upon, and he received a reply, the main portion of which we subjoin: "About twenty-five years ago I was sent to see the present Lord L——, then a fine healthy lad, who, it was said, had been licked, not only over the lips, but within the mouth, by a little terrier, which was found sitting on the sleeping lad's chest, and dipping his tongue into his master's mouth. Mr. Youatt, the veterinary surgeon, at once pronounced the dog as laboring under hydrophobia, and turning to me, said, 'If you will come to me in five days, at our dog hospital, we can dissect the animal.' I did so, and found the dog dead and Youatt busy in opening the carcass. I naturally was shy in touching the animal, and asked if he was not afraid. 'No,' he answered; 'I have repeatedly been bitten.' He, I think, owned to at least eight, and, I believe ten, undoubted introductions of the virus; and be it remembered that the attacks or bites were all on the hands of these men, so it could not be wiped off by an intervening garment. Youatt then told me that his remedy was to allow the common nitrate of silver, easily procurable, to filter into the wound; it decomposes the saliva, and in doing this destroys the virus. The above was stated in some blue book about thirty years ago by Youatt. Brodie and I acted on it, and made young Lord L——'s lips, palate and throat as black as that of his thoroughbred mad terrier; and he, if you ever see him, will tell you this tale. The poison of hydrophobia remains latent on an average of six weeks; the part heals over, but there is a simple wound more or less irritable: it then becomes painful, and the germ, whatever it is, becomes ripe for dissemination into the system, and then all hope is gone. Nevertheless, between the time of the bite and the activity of the wound previous to dissemination, the caustic of nitrate of silver is a sure preventive; after that it is as useless as all other means. The best mode of application of nitrate of silver is by introducing it into the wounds. It melts in an equal quantity of water. If already healed, the cicatrix should be rubbed and caustic ated away entirely."—Leeds Times.

A Wonderful Memory.

The learned Bishop Jewel, who died in 1571, was blessed with a most wonderful memory. He could exactly repeat what he had written at any former period after once reading it. During the ringing of the bell for public worship he could commit to memory a whole sermon and pronounce it without hesitation. His usual custom was to write the heads of his sermon on his memory, and so firmly were they, after a few minutes, impressed on his mind, that he used to say that if 10,000 people were fighting and quarreling all the time he was preaching they could not confuse him. To put him to a full trial, Dr. Parkhurst uttered to him some of the most difficult and barbarous words he could find in a calendar, and Bishop Hooper, of Gloucester, gave him forty Welsh, Irish, and foreign words, and after twice reading, and a little recollection, he repeated them backward and forward. In the year 1563 Sir Nicholas Bacon, lord keeper of the great seal, having read to him from Erasmus's Paraphrase the last clause of ten lines, confused and imperfect, with a view of more fully trying his gift, sitting silent awhile, and covering his head with his hand, he rehearsed all the broken parts the right way and the reverse without hesitation. He professed to teach this art to others, and so instructed his tutor, Dr. Parkhurst, at Zurich, that within twenty-eight days, by giving only one hour a day to the subject, he learned all the twenty-eight chapters of the gospel of Matthew so perfectly that he could repeat any verse, telling what went before and what followed.

RHYMES TO LIQUID.

Sure Quicquid is a thick wit,
If he cannot rhyme to liquid,
A thing that any Mick wid
The greatest ease can do.
Just take the herb called chick weed,
Which they o'tin cure the sick wid,
That's a decent rhyme for liquid,
And from a Mickey too.

The sailor seized a glass of grog,
And swallowed down the liquid;
Then pulled a roll of 'backy out,
And twisted off a thick quid.

—'Aw! how do you like my moustache, Mith Maura?' lisped a dandy to a merry girl. 'O, very much. It looks like the fuzz on the back of a caterpillar!'

—The Worcester Spy says that the iron car of the Adams Express Company which went through that city from New York to Boston, on the night of May 28, contained about $7,000,000. Two trusty messengers and a detective accompanied it. Two well known burglars were known to be on the train, but found no chance for operations.

—Some mischievous scamp broke up for a time an auction sale of furniture at the house of the British Consul in Baltimore, where a large party of ladies and gentlemen had assembled, by throwing a lot of dry snuff on the floor. Everything is said to hang from the shoulders, doing away with tight lacing, and alleged to be very conducive to health. It does away with hoops and skirts, and decreases the lady in quantity about two hundred per cent. It is an easy costume, and will probably be better liked when custom makes it fashionable.

—A novel suit is to be tried at the next term of the Elkhart, Indiana, circuit court. Some days ago a bad boy laid violent hands on the animal and broke its brittle thread of life. The lady brings suit against his "parient" for damages to the amount of $100. The cat was buried with very imposing ceremonies.

The ladies refused to tell anything about it, when the burglars choked them to make them confess, but they would only acknowledge the possession of $49, which they had upon their persons. The burglars took this and left. They have since been arrested, and being identified, are now confined in the Erie jail to await trial.

—A child was poisoned to death in Paris by the application of tobacco juice mixed with lard to its head.

—M. Ponsard, the author of a new and very successful play just brought out in Paris, occupied an obscure seat in the back of a private box during the first performance of the piece, and the audience was first made aware of his presence by a shower of kisses bestowed upon him by his wife when the uproarious applause decided the success of the drama.

—Old French grammars state that the French alphabet contains only twenty-five letters. Recently "double V," as the French still call W, has acquired freedom of the tongue through the influence of wagon, whist, whiskey, drawback, warrant, Walewski, Welles de Lavallette, Koenigswarter. The Moniteur, the official newspaper, has just had a considerable number of type of this letter made. It is to be hoped that the French may henceforward cease to call the Bard of Avon, M. Villiams.

—Karl Blind, father of the young man who attempted to assassinate Count Bismark, has written a letter to a London journal, in which he says: "With a bleeding heart, and bowed down with grief, I place the palm of martyrdom on the grave of him who has been his mother's pride and delight, and whom I will ever regard as my true son. A nobler, more loving nature than his, it would be impossible to imagine. From love of country and freedom he was carried away to sacrifice himself in order to spare to his fatherland the miseries of a wicked war. His was a heart full of devotion, full of filial kindness, full of the most generous aspirations. If others blame him, let it not be expected that I, to whom he looked as to a father, should give the right to any one of saying that I reprobate him, whose inspirations have been the purest, and who has enthusiastically—although to the deepest sorrow of my disconsolate wife, of myself and family—given up his young and promising life in his country's cause."

—Not long since the magistrate of Southam, Leamington, England, convicted the organist and part of the choir of the neighboring village church of Grandborough in the sum of one shilling each and cost, under the following circumstances: A member of the choir had recently died, and after his interment the organist and choir resolved to honor his memory by singing Pope's ode, "Vital Spark of Heavenly Flame," in the church on Sunday, the 18th of March. The curate, the Rev. Mr. Walsh, told them he could notballow them to sing "Vital Spark," but offered to substitute the well-known hymn, "Thy Will be Done," as given in "Hymns Ancient and Modern." They, however, refused to sing any other piece but "Vital Spark," and told Mr. Walsh he might give out whatever hymn he thought proper, they were determined to only sing that piece. Legal opinion, it is said, was taken on the point by the choir, and they persisted in their resolution, and on the appointed day carried it out. For this act the reverend gentleman summoned the organist and choir, under the 23d and 35th Vict., cap. 32, for having "disturbed; vexed and troubled" him by their proceedings. He asked the magistrate to deal leniently with them, as this object was to teach them better, and not to punish vindictively; and each of the defendants was fined as stated, 1s. and costs.

"The billiard champion of America—Joseph Dion—is about 28 years of age. He has for sometime past offered to play any man in the world the American game of billiards on a four-pocket table, in Canada, push-shot barred, for the sum of $5,000 in gold. This challenge has not been accepted as yet, and Mr. Dion leaves it open for one month longer.

AMONG the latest announcements of English publishers is a sort of Spurgeon jest-book, with the title: "Anecdotes and Stories of the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, now first collected and arranged." The London Review says of it: "This must not take to itself the credit of being the earliest clerical budget of wit. There was a 'Sterne's Convivial Jester; or, That's Your Sort.'"

A LONDON letter says "It is evident that the Prince of Wales and the Queen are on no better terms than heretofore. The Queen has gone to Osborn House, and the royal palaces are closed, even against the Prince of Wales. He wished to attend the Ascott races, and though so near Windsor Castle, is obliged to hire a furnished house. All this makes a world of scandal and ill-feeling."

IT is not generally known, says a Washington correspondent, that Senator Sumner is and has been for six or eight weeks, suffering seriously from a recurrence of the cerebral and nervous troubles caused by the bludgeon of Brooks ten years ago. He is unable to perform continuous and severe mental labor. Powerful anodynes alone bring him sleep. His physicians say that he has overtasked his brain and needs rest.

GEN. SCOTT died in the full acknowledgement and hope of the Christian faith. He was a constant and devoted attendant upon worship, and, except occasional profanity, his life was a model to public men in all decencies and temperances. He was particularly noticeable in defending the use of the epithet damn. "Damn," he used to say very often, "is not an oath; it is an expression of vulgarity, simply."

LISZT was once playing before the Emperor Nicholas of Russia. In the very midst of the piece the Emperor begun talking. Liszt suddenly stopped. The court circle looked at each other in astonishment; the Czar sent to ask what had happened. "When the Emperor speaks," replied Liszt, "every one should be silent." Next morning the Czar, who perfectly understood the hint, sent the great pianist a magnificent diamond pin.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN used to tell this story of himself: He was riding one day on the top of a stage coach in Illinois, when the driver asked him to 'treat.' 'I never use liquor,' was Mr. Lincoln's reply, 'and I cannot induce others to do so.' 'Don't you chew, neither?' said the driver. 'No, sir.' 'Nor smoke?' 'No, sir; I never use tobacco in any form.' 'Well, remarked the disgusted John, "I hain't got much opinion of those fellows with no small vices; they ususually make it up in big ones.'

THERE is a little chap in Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express office at San Francisco, that doesn't seem born to be killed. At the time of the explosion of the nitro-glycerine in the yard of Wells, Fargo & Co., in that city, he was sitting cooly at his desk writing, while plastering and timber fell around, without so much as harming a hair on his head. The same chap was sitting on the paddle-box of the steamer "Yosemite," when she was blown up, on a trip to Sacramento, and was blown entirely across the river, when he cooly swam back to the wreck to offer assistance to the less fortunate passengers.

DE LAVE, a tight-rope performer, who a long time ago astonished the natives of Rochester by his feats above the Genesee Falls, has just returned from many years spent in South America and Mexico, and is going to give the public a new sensation. He proposes to cross the Falls of Niagara on a small wire, as "the American eagle." To explain, he is having a large leathern eagle made in New York, which is to be "stuck full" of feathers and otherwise manipulated so as to resemble a live one of monstrous proportions. This is to fit closely about his body, and on walking the wire he will balance himself by flapping the artificial wings. At the same time a rope is to be suspended by him below the wire, to which his son, a boy of eight years old, will cling and go through with various athletic performances as the father advances across the falls. De Lave likewise proposes to walk on a wire over the falls, carrying both his wife and his son on his back. This promises to be the great sensation of the season. De Lave has been performing at the City of Mexico, where he occasioned a considerable furore. He brings with him a medal received from the Emperor Maximillian.

Art and Science.

—The name of the last new color is "Elephant Breath." It would be hard to imagine the shade from the name.

—A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette reports that a Mr. Disman of Upper Sandusky, Ohio, has discovered a process of hardening copper, an art which has been lost for nearly three thousand years.

—Prof. Blot believes in variety as the spice of life. He said in a recent lecture delivered at Boston, that there are only seven different kinds of food, and just seven thousand different ways of cooking them.

—A French professor has discovered that the earth does not move so fast as it did 2,000 years ago. The learned man computes that one thousand six hundred millions of years hence it will come to a stand-still. This prediction may or may not be a month or two out of the way.

—The Portland Argus says that Captain J. J. Boyd has secured a patent which will make a complete revolution in applying buttons to garments. By this invention buttons can be attached to any part of the wearing apparel without the use of thread. The invention consists solely in making the button with a spiral wire to be inserted into the cloth like a corkscrew, and then pressed down flat so as to form a ring to hold the button in place.

—The famous life size equestrian portrait of General Scott, ordered by the Commonwealth of Virginia, in 1857, which they refused to accept when the General declined to become a traitor for them, is clothed now, at his decease, with additional interest. It was painted by Edward Troye, a native of Switzerland. The General sat for the picture at West Point and selected Chepultepec for the scene. It is the largest equestrian portrait ever produced in this country, and is now in the Capitol at Washington.

—M. Melsens, a French chemist, has found that tobacco from various countries contains nicotine in very different proportions. In tobacco from some parts of France there is 7.96 per cent. of nicotine; whilst Havana tobacco contains only 2 per cent. He proposes to smokers a way of preserving them from the effects of the alkaloid, by putting into the tube of the pipe or cigar holder a little ball of cotton, impregnated with citric and tennic acids. As the smoke passes through the cotton, it will deposit the nicotine therein, in the shape of tannate and citrate.

The Lafayette Journal is pleased to learn that John Perdue, Esq., a well-known and highly esteemed citizen of that city, proposes to add to the generous offer of Mr. Rose $30,000 more, and the institution is to be located at Lafayette. It is understood that Mr. Rose will increase his subscription to $70,000, and that Mr. Perdue will make his $100,000 rather than that the project should fail. Several other gentlemen propose to add liberal sums to these munificent subscriptions.

—The rector of St. Lazarus Church, Memphis, the Rev. E. W. Rogers, issued a pastoral letter to his flock recently, in which he exhorts his congregation to offer the following prayer for Jeff. Davis, "every night when you go to bed, and every morning as soon as you rise":

"O God whose mercies are everlasting, and whose power is infinite, look down with pity and compassion upon Thy servant, whom thou hast laid in a place of darkness and the deep. Give him always a sorrowful sense of his sins and of Thy fatherly love and correction. Give to his judges tenderness and compassion, and to him a meek and forgiving spirit toward all those who have confined him. Raise us friends to pity and relieve him. Give him the continual comfort of Thy Holy Spirit, and so sanctify his afflictions that they may work for him an eternal weight of glory through the merits of Jesus Christ our Lord."

SONG.

THOMAS OTWAY.

I did but look and love awhile,
'Twas but for one-half hour;
Then to resist I had no will,
And now I have no power.

To sigh, to wish, is all my care;
Sighs which do heat impart
Enough to melt the coldest ice,
Yet can not warm your heart.

O! would your pity give my heart
A corner of your breast,
'Twould learn of yours the winning art,
And quickly steal the rest.

How Simon Suggs was Treated by the Widow Flash.

Now, Sol., said Simon to Sol. Smith, his intimate friend, I will tell you how the lovely Julia treated me, if you will faithfully promise not to tell any person alive. You promise, do you? Well, I had been courting Julia assiduously for a year or more past, and never would bring matters to a close, so I determined to pluck up courage, and have my fate decided at once. I therefore decked myself in my best bib and tucker, had my hair cut, my beard and moustaches trimmed, and called on my dear Julia one bright morning in May, and after cooing, I was desirous of billing, but my heart failed me to make the attempt. I placed my hand on her shoulder and said, widow, this is the softest place I ever put my hand in the whole course of my life. Indeed, Mr. Suggs, said she, I will put it on a softer place, and Sol, now you promise you won't tell anybody. She took my hand from her shoulder, in her own soft delicate, plump little hand, and put it right on the top of my head.

"I have this afternoon been preaching to a congregation of asses," said a conceited young parson. "Then that was the reason you always called them beloved brethren," replied a strong-minded lady.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

AN amateur farmer being asked why he continued to raise a kind of potatoes well-known worthless, replied that he knew they were not fit to be eaten or fed to stock, but that he liked to raise them because they yielded so well and were such good potatoes for seed.

MR. MECHII gives the following facts and advice: "I never permit weeds to grow in my crops; it is like permitting a hungry, unwelcome intruder to devour part of your dinner. Nothing pays better than keeping down weeds. I lay down as an agricultural axiom, 'never employ a man where you can use a horse, and never a horse where you can work a steam engine.'"

A Long-Island cultivator grafts the grape vine the same as he does pears, apples, etc., and he says with almost invariable success. He sets on young side-shoots near the bottom of the parent or main stem and as close to it as it can be done. He uses bass-wood matting for bandaging the grafts, and over all some moistened moss. He has had them to ripen from ten to twelve feet of wood in one season.

At the recent sheep fair in Ripon, Wis., Mr. F. B. Ellsworth exhibited a natural monstrosity in the shape of a lamb with eight legs, two bodies as far as the shoulders and only one head and neck. Had it been dropped alive, it never could have walked, for with its head in the natural position, its eight legs would be in a horizontal position, and if it stood on either set of legs, its head would be wrong—one eye up and the other down, and it would have one set of legs where its back ought to stand.

A NEW METHOD TO PRESERVE MEAT.—Prof. Hofman, of Berlin, Germany, disclosed to a meeting of naturalists a new method of preserving meats, for which Dr. Redwood of London obtained a patent. It is this: The meat is submerged for a short time in the tasteless and oderless paraffine, as it has been manufactured by an improved method of distillation, made from the "Bagdad Cannel" coal. Then the meat is taken out of this paraffine, which becomes hardened. This coating may be made thick at pleasure by repeated submersions.

When it is desired to prepare such meat for the table, it is only necessary to put it into hot water; the paraffine will dissolve and rise to the top of the water and may again be used for the same purpose. According to accounts of Dr. Redwood and Dr. Gueneau de Massy, it works most admirably. The taste is not injured in the least. The Dr. placed before this association a mutton chop enclosed in paraffine and brought to him by the carrier of patents, which had been sent to him from London a few days ago.—Translated from the German.

Liberality in Farming.

In this art, and almost in this art alone, "it is the liberal hand which maketh rich."

Liberality in providing utensils is the saving both of time and labor. The more perfect his instruments, the more profitable are they.

So also it is with his working cattle and his stock. The most perfect in their kinds are ever the most profitable.

Liberality in good barns and warm shelters is the source of health, strength and comfort to animals; causes them to thrive on less food; and secures from damage all sorts of crops.

Liberality also in the provision of food for domestic animals is the source of flesh, muscle and manure.

Liberality to the earth, in seed, culture, and compost is the source of its bounty.

Thus it is in agriculture as in every part of creation, a wise and paternal Providence has inseparably connected our duty and our happiness.

In raising domestic animals, the condition of his success is kindness and benevolence to them.

BEET ROOTS AND TRICHINOSIS.—The statement recently made in the London News, that pigs are infected with trichinosis from eating beet-root, appears to be incorrect. The report seems to have originally arisen from the fact that in Saxony, where the terrible outbreak first took place last year, are a great number of large sugar factories, and the refuse and diseased beet-roots are there made use of as food for pigs. The assumption gained a certain degree of support from the investigation of the late Prof. Schacht, who found in the roots of the beet, when diseased, little rounded forms visible to the naked eye, which upon closer investigation, proved to be capsules containing small eggs or animals, which in many respects bore a resemblance to the trichine. It was consequently thought that it was the cause of infection, that the introduction of these capsules into the swine was followed by the development of trichines. Prof. Virchow, of Berlin, however, stated in a speech at the commencement of this year that Professor Schacht found on further investigation, these were not trichines. At the outbreak of Hedersleben, a Frankfort physician, Dr. Stein, made a thorough examination of these worms in beet-root, and found they were in no way connected with the trichine epidemic. Professor Virchow, in remarking on these observations, said: "This, therefore, as a source of the trichine can be looked upon as set aside."

HOW DEEP TO PLANT CORN.—Several experiments have been made, in order to ascertain the proper depth at which to plant corn, and by one of them it was discovered that when it was planted three inches deep, it came up and grew well until it was three or four inches high, and then stopped for a fortnight, while the corn in the same field planted at a less depth grew rapidly. On examination, it was found that a joint had been formed about an inch and a half above the kernel, and that the roots had sprouted out from that joint, leaving all below to perish. While the process of changing roots was going on, the plants ceased to grow above ground, but in about a fortnight recovered their vigor, and they were about that length of time later in maturing the grain than the seeds which were planted shallower.

The following experiment was made by Burger, in Germany, in order to ascertain the proper depth for planting this grain. He found that Indian corn planted at the following depths, came up as described:

No. 1. 1	inch,	came up in	8	days.
No. 2. 1½	inches,	came up in	9½	days.
No. 3. 2	do	do	10	days.
No. 4. 2½	do	do	11½	days.
No. 5. 3	do	do	12	days.
No. 6. 3½	do	do	13	days.
No. 7. 4	do	do	13½	days.
No. 8. 4½	do	do	——	days.
No. 9. 5	do	do	——	days.
No. 10. 5½	do	do	17½	days.
No. 11. 6	do	do	——	days.

Nos. 8, 9 and 11, were dug up after twenty-two days, when it was found that No. 8 had an inch more to grow to reach the surface. Nos. 9 and 11 were three inches below the surface. No. 10 came up in 17½ days, but withered after six days' growth. The more shallow the seed was covered, the more rapidly the sprout made its appearance, and the stronger afterwards was the stalk.

Corn will not germinate unless the temperature of the soil attains to 55° Fahr, and at a temperature higher than 110, it equally refuses to vegetate. Much damage to the crop arises from planting when the soil is at the wrong temperature, and it has been said that if the time ever arrives when the average crop of the country equals the premium crops, it must be when every farmer owns a thermometer and knowns how to use it.

—Tom Moore said to Sir Robert Peel, on looking at the picture of an Irish orator, "You can see the very quiver of his lips." "Yes," said Peel, "and the arrow coming out of it." He meant arrah.

—A lawyer and a doctor were disputing the other day about a bill a fellow owed each of them. He was able to pay one of them, and so he left the matter to themselves who ought to have the money. "I ought to have the money as a matter of course," said the lawyer, "for I saved the fellow from going to the penitentiary." "Well," said the doctor, "I saved him from h—ll." It is needless to add which got the money?"

REMARKABLE CURE OF STIFF KNEE BY ALCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER.—How many persons, from stepping on a piece of orange peel, have been lamed for life. A case which might have been of this kind has just been brought to our notice. A gentleman, from placing the heel of his boot on a piece of orange peel, was suddenly thrown down, and violently sprained his knee. He was six months confined to his bed, though he had the best medical advice. As a last resort a very eminent physician was called in to see if anything more could be done. After examination he said. "My opinion is, your knee will never be bent again." He recommended that the whole leg and knee should be encased in a plaster of Paris bandage, which would accelerate the permanent stiffening of the knee, and said, "the sooner it was done the better." But the patient, before trying this application and having a stiff knee for life, enveloped it in our Porous Plasters, and in less than two months his knee was perfectly cured.

Words of Vital Interest.
Will the thousands who read columns of frivolous verbiage every day, devote five minutes to the perusal of a few facts which concern them nearly? Our text is Health, and we will put our commentary into a nutshell. Weakness is indirectly the cause of all sickness; for if nature be strong enough to resist the morbid influences which produce illness, of course they are powerless. Seek strength, therefore. Invigorate and regulate the system. When the quicksilver ranges from 80 to 90 degrees in the shade, the most athletic are enfeebled, and the weak are prostrated. It is at such a time that such an invigorator as HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS is urgently needed. What are the effects of this rare Vegetable Tonic? Would that all who have known its benefits could condense their experience into this paragraph. They would tell the healthy to protect their health they must use this great safeguard against the debilitating influences. They would exhort the weak to discard all unmedicated and impure stimulants, and cling to this wholesome and unfailing tonic and alterative as the shipwrecked mariner would cling to a raft in a stormy sea. They would be of dyspeptic pangs relieved, of appetite restored, of shattered nerves restrung, of headaches cured, of disordered functions regulated, of hypochondria dissipated, of miasmatic diseases baffled, of fever and ague cured, of liver complaints arrested, of heat, privation and toil defied, of hope reanimated, and cheerfulness restored. Such are the effects of HOSTETTER'S BITTERS.

RATS versus BIRDS:—Whoever engages in shooting small birds is a cruel man; whoever aids in exterminating rats is a benefactor. We should like some one to give us the benefit of their experience in driving out those pests. We need something besides dogs, cats, and traps for this business.—[Scientific American, N. Y.

See COSTAR'S advertisement above,

"COSTARS' RAT EXTERMINATOR is simple, safe, and sure—the most perfect RATification meeting we have ever attended.—Every Rat that can get it, properly prepared, will eat it, and every one that eats it will die, generally at some place as distant as possible from where it was taken.—[Lake Shore, Mich. Mirror.

HOUSEKEEPERS troubled with vermin need be so no longer, if they use "COSTAR'S" Exterminator. We have used it to our satisfaction; and if a box cost $5, we would have it. We have tried poisons, but they effected nothing; but Costar's article knocks the breath out of Rats, Mice, Roaches, Ants and Bed-Bugs, quicker than we can write it. It is in great demand all over the country.—[Medina, Ohio, Gazette.

FARMERS and HOUSEKEEPERS—should recollect that hundreds of dollars' worth of Grain provisions, &c, are annually destroyed by Rats, Mice, Ants, and other insects and vermin—all of which can be prevented by a few dollars' worth of "COSTAR'S" Rat, Roach &c. Exterminator, bought and used freely.

DR. VELPAU'S FRENCH PILLS.

Ladies, take Particular Notice.

THE REAL VELPAU FEMALE PILL.

[WARRANTED FRENCH.]

THESE PILLS, so celebrated many years ago in Paris for the relief of female irregularities, and afterward so notorious for their criminal employment in the practice of abortion, are now offered for sale for the first time in America. They have been kept in comparative obscurity from the fact that the originator, Dr. Velpau, is a physician in Paris of great wealth and strict conscientious principles, and has withheld them from general use, lest they should be employed for unlawful purposes. In overcoming Female Obstructions, Falling of the Womb, Whites, Green Sickness, Suppression, Retention, or Immoderate Flow of the Monthly Discharges, they seem to be truly omnipotent, bursting open the flood-gates from whatever cause may have stopped them; but they are offered to the public only for legitimate uses, and all agents are forbidden to sell them when it is understood that the object is unlawful. Married ladies should never take them when there is any reason to believe themselves pregnant, for they will be sure to produce a miscarriage.

These pills are entirely safe under all circumstances, being composed entirely of substances from the vegetable kingdom.

Each box has the coat of arms for the City of Paris stamped on the box, with the words "Trade Mark" in French, to counterfeit which is a misdemeanor, and all persons will be dealt with according to law.

Full directions accompany every box.

Ladies can obtain a box sealed from the eyes of the curious, by inclosing One Dollar and six post-office stamps to any respectable druggists, or to O. G. STAPLES, General Agent for the United States, Watertown, N. Y.

Judging from the appearance of his associates they had had some difficulty and he had used said arms upon his own friends, and the shot had been returned for all had evidently been shot in the neck.

Horrible Murder in Medina.

We have received from Mr. T. S. Baker, of Medina, and Deputy Sheriff Hare who arrested the criminal, the particulars of a horrible double murder which was committed in Medina last night.

The murderer is named Isaac VanAcken, and he resided in the south-west corner of the town of Medina, on a farm of 160 acres, 80 improved, which he owns. He is about 45 years of age, and well-to-do in the world. He has borne, generally, a bad character among his neighbors, being of a quarrelsome disposition, somewhat addicted to liquor, and has served a term in the State Prison for stealing.

His victims are his wife and her daughter, a girl 11 years of age, named Mattie Dewey. The prisoner was the second husband of his wife.

It appears from the prisoners confession, and from facts otherwise obtained, that during the afternoon of the Sabbath, a dispute arose between the husband and wife a circumstance by no means unusual, in which the prisoner used very abusive language. A son of the prisoner about sixteen years old by a former wife, was present during the quarrel, but left after it had apparantly subsided. On the occasion of a former quarrel the wife had invoked the assistance of her brother living near their residence, who had inflicted sumary personal chastisement on Van Acken. On this occasion after the departure of the younger Van Acken, Mrs. Van Acken started, accompanied by her daughter, for her brother's house, which enraged the prisoner, and he told her that he would stop her again telling her brother and getting him whipped, siezing an axe, struck her on the head with the flat side of it, knocking her down and stunning her. On seeing her mother fall the girl ran, pursued however, by Van Acken, who overtaking her, struck her as he had her mother, knocking her down and also stunning her. Returning to the prostrate form of his wife, this brute discerning some signs of life in her, struck her once or twice with the edge of the axe splitting her skull, and cutting a fearful gash in her neck. Returning then to the little girl he gashed her with the axe, on the head effectually extinguishing the vital spark. After the commission of the horid deeds, the murderer staid in the vicinity of the house until the approach of some neighbors when he confessed the crime and gave himself up.

Beside the son above mentioned the murderer has one other son, a boy seven years of age.—Adrian Times

Fourth of July in Franklin.

The citizens of Franklin are to put on the top stone of their Soldiers Monument on the coming 4th, and in connection therewith intend to celebrate the day. The order of exercises at the Monument will consist of prayer, singing, speaking and firing of cannon. The procession will then be formed, and march, under the charge of the Marshall, and with music, to an appropriate place to listen to an oration and other speaking, and partake of a pic-nic dinner. The dinner will be emphatically a free dinner; yet as there will be many from abroad who prefer paying, to contributing to the dinner, such, will be permitted to pay a charge of 50 cents. The citizens would have preferred to leave out this feature, and not even seem to pull in the latch-string against any. But as all Soldiers and their wives together with many invited guests, are exempted from all charge; and as the influx of strangers may be large and expense outside of the dinner considerable, such a measure of protection was deemed but fair.

JAMES B. HAMPTON. Sec'y.

ANOTHER FLOWING WELL.—J. Davenport, near the Warner Hotel on the Ridge, has "struck ile." He bored forty-eight feet—struck a current that fills a pen stock pipe six inches in diameter.—This is the second one of these remarkable wells within a few rods of each other. Together they make up quite a large stream, watering the country for some distance. It is thought that a very large current of wates passes under the ground in that vicinity and if sufficient opening were made to it, a stream sufficiently large to run machinery could be brought to the top of the earth.

☞ Last Sunday the Rev. Mr. Foot of Detroit, preached at the Macon Church in behalf, of the Freedmen of the South. His discourse was remarkably clear and convincing. He very logically showed that we were under many obligations to contribute for the support of that suffering people, both in a moral and political sense. After the discourse about $25 was contributed by the congregation for the above object.

UNION.—The N, L S. & S. Union will hold a special meeting in Union Hall Tecumseh at 4 o'clock on the p. m. of Saturday, June 23d, 1866. All Soldiers and Sailors within the jurisdiction of this Union are cordially invited to be present.

By order of
H. Romyen, Secretary. L. Saviers, Pres't N.L.S.&S.U.

Whitney's Music Store.

We invite the attention of our readers to Whitney's Musical advertisement in another column. His establishment is located at 173 Summit St. Toledo, Ohio, and is, without doubt, one of the most complete and reliable Music Houses in the West, rivalling the best houses in Cleveland, Detroit, Milwaukee and Chigo. He keeps constantly on hand a full assortment of Piano's from the establishment of Steienway & Sons, Chickering & Sons, Galeuburg & Vaupel, S, D & H. W. Smiths celebrated American Organs and Whitney's improved Melodeons. These instruments have all a national reputation, and the Melodeons which are manufactured by Mr. Whitney himself are conceded by all good judges to be second to none in the market. Every Melodeon that goes out of his store is warranted for five years. Having procured the assistance of experienced tuners, he is giving his attention to tuning and reparing musical instruments of all kinds. In connection with the above he is also carrying on a large musical Publishing House, keeping constantly on hand a full assortment of the latest sheet music and Musical Instruction Books of all kinds. He has commenced the publication of a periodical called the American Organ, the subscription price of which is $2,50 per year. In short his whole establishment is a model of neatness and thrift. All, who desire Pianos, Organs, Melodeons or music, of the best quality and at cheapest cash prices should address Whitney's Palace of Music 173 Summit St. Toledo, Ohio.

Union School.

The closing week of our Union School promises some new feature of especial interest.

The examination of the various classes commences on Monday, June 25th, and close on the afternoon of Wednesday.

On Thursday afternoon at 2 1-2 o'clock will be held, in the School Chapel, the exercises of the Graduating class.

This class, consisting of nine members have completed the Course of Study prescribed by the rules of the school, and will, at the close of the exercises, receive the Diploma recently prepared under the direction of the School Board.

The Tecumseh Band are preparing some excellent music for the occasion, and it is hoped the friends and patrons of the School will fill up the chapel to its utmost capacity.

The order of exercises will be as follows:

Another Fire.

On Thursday evening of last week, the Dwelling of E. Morehouse in Brownville caught fire from a defective chimney in the kitchen wing of the house, and came near being a total loss. By the exertion of the neighbors the house was saved, although it was severely damaged by fire and water. His furniture and waring apparel &c. were all saved, but they also were very much damaged by rough handling. This makes the fourth fire in the village since the first of January. Luckily Mr. Morehouse was insured in the sum of $700, $600 on his house and $100 on Contents in the Phœnix of Hartford. Last Tuesday the State Agent of the Phœnix—Capt. C. D. Stevens of Detroit, came out and adjusted the loss, and paid it up in full. Mr. Morehouse receiving a Draft for Four Hundred Dollars.—The Phœnix is noted for its promptness in the payment of losses and we can cheerfully recommend it to all who wish to insure.

☞ This is the week of the National Horse show at Adrian, and we presume, that nearly everybody with their families are intending to attend.

Monday, of couse, nothing was done, but since then the Fair has been in full blaat and so far has been a perfect success. To-day (Thursday) and to-morrow, will be the "big days." Every one must arrange their affairs to be there on one or the other of those days and both if they can.

Failure.

It is with deep regret that we are compelled to announce to our readers that Albert Anderson Esq. has made an assignment of his property and effects to Webster Anderson and E B Wood, for the benefit of his creditors. It has been known for some time that Mr. Anderson was very "hard up" but it has been hoped he would be able to avert the catastrophe. Aside from his own personal loss this failure will be a great damage to the town. Scores of our citizens will be losers to a greater or less extent, and many laboring men and men of limited means, who had deposited their hard earnings with him, have lost their all. Mr. A. had a large trade with the farmers in his purchases of wheat, wool, pork, produce &c. than any other man in Northern Lenawee, and in fact he was one of the most extensive buyers in the County. His failure therefore must necessarily inflict a heavy blow upon the trade of Tecumseh. No blame can be attached to any one.—It was simply one of those unfortunate occurrences, to which all traders are liable, especially in times of fluctuating prices, and when we take into consideration the rapid decline in prices during the last year, the wonder is, not that one man has made an assignment, but that all of our produce buyers but one have been able to weather the storm.

☞ The second annual meeting of the Ridgeway Base Ball Club was held at Ridgeway, Wednesday evening, June 13th, 1866. The organization was well represented. The house was called to order by President, J. Davidson and proceeded to the election of officers for the following year which resulted as follows: President, Jehiel Davidson; Vice President, G. W. Jackson; Secretary, Ed. DePuy; Treasurer, Frank Davidson;—Directors, C. S. Waring, G. W. Jackson, Leonidas Palmer. Regular days for play, each alternate Saturday afternoon. On motion, meeting adjourned.

BURGLARS.

Within the past few days several dwellings along the Ridge have been visited by Burglars and several articles of small note have been stolen.

At the house of Wilber Greenfield, the Burglar a well dressed man, after unfastening the shutters, inserted his arm through the window near where Mr. G. was sleeping, and while he was preparing to give his night visitor a reception the intruder took the alarm and fled making good time for the woods.

Communication.

The light of truth the mist of error soon dispels.

One of our friends reproves us for finding fault, as he calls it, with the Common Council in your last weeks issue, and asserts that the village Trustees, as individual officers, and as the Common Council are bound to perform only the duties which their constituents at their election, prescribed, and that it was expressly understood by them, as candidates, and by the electors, that if elected, they should not enforce the Prohibitory Liquor Law.

He insists therefore, that for such purpose no authority was delegated to these officers—that delegated powers must be construed strictly—that when elected on a plat-form they are bound thereby—that official duties are thus limited by the constituency, without regard to the more general provisions of the laws—and that official oaths, if of any moral obligation, can only have relation to the performance of such prescribed and limited duties.

He contends, that consequently, as Liquor selling and drinking was an established privilege in this village, at the time of the election of these officers, they cannot interfere with its continuance and that to enforce this Law against their friends would be the basest of ingratitude,—it would evidently not be in obedience to the moral precept, "all things whatever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them." And to make his "high argument" still more convincing and unanswerable he re-produced and pronounced with great energy the opinion of the poet—

"He that imposes an oath, makes it—
Not he that for convenience takes it."
* * *
"Then how can any man be said
To break an oath he never made."
* * *
"Oaths are but words, and words but wind Too feeble implements to bind."
* * *
"Oaths were not purposed, more than law,
To keep the Good and Just in awe."

As for sanitary measures being taken, he did not particularly object, if they did not invade or abridge our natural and inalienable rights of liberty and pursuit of happiness secured to us by the Constitution—for as long as water run and Corn and Rye grew, there should be spirits enough in the people to maintain these rights inviolate.

A municipality, whether small or great in its government, is justly compared to a Ship and often very properly, called the Ship of State. What have its officers to do but to run it in its accustomed channel, to and from its usual port, bearing the cargo of freight its owners may place upon it?—What have its officers to do with its decaying and rotten timbers, its small leaks, and its concealed causes of spontaneous combustion, until the developments show evident and imminent danger of immediate destruction? Liberty, glorious freedom to do as he pleases, is the boon every American has the right to claim as his inheritance.

Whether our friend has fairly stated the case, as lawyers say, the people must determine We pretend to no knowledge on the subject, and neither affirm or deny the truth of any of his assertions. But the duties and obligations of corporate officers, having been so forcibly and eloquently brought under consideration, may be a proper subject to be examined in some communication hereafter.

THE TOAD'S WIFE.

BY HENRY MORLEY.

Rospo was an ambitious nobleman, who had a jewel of a wife. What poets feign that their loves have, she really had. Her eyes were diamonds, her teeth were pearls; her hair was of the purest gold. She was a wife men valued by her husband.

"Ah!" said he, one morning, when he observed her biting her bread at breakfast. "What teeth, my treasure! A gift of only one such pearl would make the chief Sultana, who has rule over the great Sultan himself, my servant. Ah, me! ah, me! my fortune at Court could be made with one of those large double teeth that your cheek hides. And you bite bread with them."

"I would give more than a tooth to serve you," said the good wife; and she really caused her largest tooth to be drawn for him. It was a pearl for any queen.

"You said you would give more than a tooth to serve me," Rospo whispered to his wife a fortnight afterwards, as they walked in the woods together. "The Queen longs for another pearl like that I gave her, because then she might have a pair of ear drops beautiful enough to make the houris die of envy." And he had the other tooth.

A week afterwards, Rospo was very sad. The mighty Vizier to the Sultan of the Dawn was dying, he explained. Another man competed with himself in bribes to become the old Vizier's successor. He had spent all in vain, and was a ruined man unless one other bag of gold could be obtained to give weight to his claim.

"Be comforted," said the kind wife. "Look at this idle wealth of hair, on a head that is never seen by the world uncovered. Take it and win your prize."

Accordingly she had her head shaved to the scalp, and gave him all her golden hair, for which he returned vows of everlasting love.

"Vexatious accident!" cried Rospo, rushing suddenly into his wife's chamber, three days afterwards. "The Sultan has changed his favorite. Another of his wives now rules him. Yesterday it was all Zareum, now it is all Zeram; and Zeram is furious against me, because of the two great pearls given by me to her rival."

"Take my other grinders," said the wife.

"Useless, alas! useless!" said the husband. "All the pearls in your mouth, furious as she is, will barely suffice to turn her anger into friendship."

"At least," said the kind lady, "you may take them all and try."

"Glorious success, my precious one," said Rospo to his wife, next day. "Zeram is mad with delight at the pearl bracelet I have given her. The Vizier cannot live another hour. The Sultan is now on his way to consult with him for the last time, and hear his last wishes. That miserly wretch, even in his last hour, is greedy for a bribe. My rival has just left his door. I know that I have but to ask for one of those great diamond eyes of yours, and have it in time to make sure of the creature's good word against whatever gift another can have offered him."

"So Rospo rushed away again, with one of his wife's eyes in his hand, and in the evening went back to her with exultation; crying out:

"Better and better! It needs only the other diamond to make me Vizier. The old man is dead, and spoke for me. But when the Sultan saw upon the coverlet the diamond I had just given, he said that no man should be the Vizier but he who would present his Ruler with another diamond as glorious as that."

"But," said the wife, "I am now bald, toothless, and one-eyed. Will you bear with me and guide me when I am left altogether blind?"

"An Eastern wife," said Rospo angrily, "is never seen of men, and has nothing to see except her husband. You know well what I am like. Think that after all I have done, and all the trouble I have had, and wealth I have risked, without that other diamond I shall be ruined."

So the good wife was left sitting in darkness, and her husband, become Vizier to the Sultan of the Dawn, returned to her no more. Why should he? How could she help him when she could not help herself?"

But Oberon and Titania were then traveling across the country of the Dawn. So they went one of them to Rospo, and the other one to his deserted wife.

The Sultan did not see the King of the Fairies, but it was told that he did not see any more his own Vizier, who had been flattering him a minute ago. And there was a large toad hopping to the door. It seemed to have come from underneath the throne.

Oberon leading the Toad by a magic string, met on his way Titania, who advanced towards him lovingly, with her arm on the neck of the most radiant of fairies. It was a fairy with eyes of the starlight, hair of plaited sunbeams, and teeth through which she could lisp a magic language.

"I take this good wife for my friend," Titania said.

"And I brought that fellow Rospo to the dust," said Oberon. "See, here he is, and for his punishment he bears a jewel in his head. The Sultan has not missed it from its casket yet, and when he does he will not know that the Toad's head is its casket now. The Toad's head shall be heavy with it; he shall never be without a headache until Oberon is dead. Come with us, beautiful new fairy."

"Nay," said the fairy wife. "Since the Toad is my husband, I shall make my couch with him and cherish him."

She did so; and because of her there is not a more humble and harmless, or a more home-keeping creature upon earth than the Toad, who was once so eager to go out and be a Vizier. His headache is still constant; one has only to look at him and see that. Of the precious jewel in his head we have all heard.

As for the Toad's Wife, in the homes of generous and patient women she has, in our own time, now and then been seen.

MERCER's exportation of females to Washington Territory proves a poor speculation. The women don't get married, and they talk of suing Mercer for damage.

MY HUNT AFTER THE BABY.

I had been to the corn lot in the hope of finding a few roasting ears for supper; but there was none ripe enough, so I walked slowly back to the house, with my hands under my apron to save them from sunburn; and the moment I stepped into the sitting-room I saw the baby was missing.

The baby was one that had been left with us—sister Bell and me—while the dear mamma went to see the dear papa, sick in a far away hospital. It was a plump, peachy little thing, nearly a year old, named Maude—familiarly called Madge and more familiarly called Midget. She was as full of mischief as she could hold, crept all about the house, throwing things out of doors or into the fire, as came handiest; thrust her hands behind her and screeched like a hyena, if any one approached to interfere with her operations, and slept about five minutes twice a day. Her usual time to be crawling around under foot was in the early part of the day when the kitchen work was in progress; in the afternoon, when the work was all done, and we ready for a frolic with her ladyship, the little nuisance might generally be found sequestered in a corner, hugging a bosom full of matches, or sticking postage stamps all over her chubby arms.

This time I had left her asleep. She must have been asleep for she didn't wink, and when the little deceiver was coaxing me she always winked desperately. I laid her on a rug in a cool corner, and, leaving the door open, walked down to the cornfield and back again in about seven minutes, as nearly as I could judge.

The baby was missing! There was the print of little moist head on the pillow, there were the little blue hints of shoes, just as she had kicked them off in her play. Hurriedly I went through room after room, searching and calling. Not a glimpse of the little white frock, not a lisp from the prattling tongue.

"Baby! baby! where are you?" I cried. O dear, Mr. T. B. Aldrich! It wasn't our baby you had in mind, was it, when you wrote those lines:—

"Oh where is our dainty, our darlin',
The daintiest darling of all,
Little Marie?"

Rushing to the foot of the stairs, "O Bell," I shouted, have you seen baby?"

"No, I haven't; I guess not. Why?"

I knew by the way Bell spoke that she was not half awake, but her coolness annoyed me.

"You guess not; well, she's lost; I went to the lot after roasting ears, and when—"

A fretful exclamation from Bell interrupted me.

"O dear me! have you looked in the parlar? I've no doubt but she's there poking over my photograph album. Do look, please, sis."

Terror overmastered my strong desire to fling back a snappish answer to this aggravating remark. Down stairs again. I threw the parlor door, which having been tightly closed, I had not before tried. All undisturbed and quiet. How thankful I should have been just then to have seen everything topsy-turvy, the phantom and grass bouquets in ruins, and Bell's album in the smutty fingers of the little culprit.

With a groan I shut the door and commenced the search anew—I opened all the closets and presses that I had opened before, looking under bureaus and sofas, shook the ironing basket fished in the swill barrel. All vain! vain! No baby—no Midget.

Then I ran out to the currant bushes, where a few tempting red bunches were still hanging. Bell saw and hailed me from the chamber window.

I looked up to see the provoking girl sitting by the open blind, braiding her tangled hair, and told her to come down and help me find this child.

"Have you looked in the ash hole, and the bandboxes, and the big churn?" asked this trying sister of mine; but I saw her eyes opening very wide, and in two minutes more she was flouncing about the kitchen, with her unfastened braids hang about her shoulders in a very original style of "waterfall."

Her movements were peculiar and characteristic. She took the door mat, jerked the pump handle, examined the bread tray and the flour barrel. Then her eyes fell upon the sink drain.

"She couldn't have got in there, now, could she?" questioned Bell, with terror in every feature. "The horrid sewer, you knew!" And she looked a whole chapter of Victor Hugo at me in an instant.

"Of course not through a four inch spout! and put the strainer in after her! What a preposterous notion!"

And Bell does not know to this very day that not five minutes before she came down I was working the broom handle down that very spout with all might and main.

Out of doors we went, examined the outhouses and clumps of elder, looked over the fence, up street, down street, and finally returned disconsolate to the kitchen.

"Midget! Midget! dear, precious little angel, where are you?" moaned Bell, dropping down upon the settee. I did not say, humph, pestiferous little angel! for Bell's distress was too genuine to be mocked. So, as we sat with our arms round each other, crying, we heard a very slight noise in the direction of the little kitchen which contained no furniture but a stove and a table. We had glanced round this room once or twice; but as there seemed to be no hiding places the thought of searching had never occured to us.

The stove was a large sized Stewart, with an oven occupying the lower part. Well, to cut the story short, the baby was in the oven! We knew it, Bell and I, as soon as it was repeated, and simultaneously rushed for the cook room. There she sat—the mischief—bolt upright in the oven, with her head in the high part and her feet in the low, treating herself to the contents of a blackberry pie which had been left in from the morning's baking. She had taken off the upper crust whole, spreading it on her bosom like a napkin, and was employed in picking out the blackberries one by one and conveying them to her mouth. She looked up at us, and oh, such a face! What with cunning, fright and blackberry juice, I have never seen such a face before or since.

Bell caught her out, kissed her comparatively clean, scolding her all the time. Then she carried her to the sink and pumped water on her without the least fear of washing her down the spout. As soon as the little lady recovered her breath she screamed furiously and pointed to the oven with decided demonstrations of a plan to return to her repast. Bell begged the privilege of putting her back to finish the pie; but I steadily set my face against such an indulgence, and when she and Midget both insisted, I set the matter at rest by kindling a huge fire in the stove, and making vigorous preparations for an early tea.

—Here is an Oriental maxim just translated to us from the East, which we think that even Prof. Giles would admit into his collection.

"If a man knows, and knows that he knows, he will lead a happy life;

"If a man does not know, and knows that he does not know, he may lead a tolerable life;

"But if a man does not know, and does not know that he does not know, he will lead a miserable life.

—"Sir," said an old Scotch woman to her minister, "I dinna ken a part of your sermon yesterday." "Indeed! what was it?" "You said the Apostles used the figure of circumlocution, and I dinna ken what it means." "Is that all? It's very plain. The figure of circumlocution is merely a periphrastic mode of diction." "Oh! ah! is that all!" said the good woman, "what a puir fool I were not to understand that!"

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK.

General Intelligence.

It is reported that oil wells in Tehuantepec are yielding enormously.

The President has sent to the Senate the name of Green Clay Smith, of Kentucky, as Governor of Montana Territory.

The Express states that the Western Union Telegraph Company was consolidated on the 11th with the American Telegraph Company.

At an informal meeting of Senators on the 12th, it was decided to close the present session of Congress on or about the 15th of July.

The warlike foreign news had the effect of causing a rapid advance in gold in New York on the 16th. It opened at 154½, and advanced to 158¾.

The House Military Committee has agreed to report a new army bill. It provides for a reduction of ten regiments below the number named in the former bill.

The President has vetoed the bill to enable the New York and Montana Iron Manufacturing Company to purchase a certain amount of the public lands not now in the market.

A great part of the town of Mayassuse, Porto Rico, was burnt May 29. An American man-of-war sent fifteen men ashore to assist in extinguishing the flames. The loss was not ascertained.

The London Herald says the Chilian Minister to London had demanded his passports. The British Government is said to have offended both belligerents. Spain is incensed at Mr. Layard's language, and Chili is indignant at being left in the lurch at the eleventh hour.

The House Committee on Foreign Relations will report resolutions mildly censuring the course of the Government on the Fenian movement. The committee will also take a bold position in reference to Mexican matters, but unanimously oppose the indorsement of the Mexican bonds.

According to the postal law just approved by the President, prepaid and free letters are to be forwarded at the request of the party addressed from one office to another without additional postage charge, and returned dead letters restored to the writers thereof free of postage.

The Postmaster General has refused the demand of the New England railroads for an increased allowance for carrying the mails, on the ground that the Department is already paying all it can afford in consideration of the large sums lost on the transportation of the mails at the South.

From the 1st of July next, letters posted in the United States, and addressed to the Dutch West Indies—Curacoa, Saba, St. Eustatius, and St. Martin—may be transmitted to their destination via France, in the French mail, at a postage of 33 cents each single rate of one quarter ounce or under, prepayment being optional with the sender.

Representative Grinnell, of Iowa, was assaulted in Washington, on the 14th, by Gen. Rousseau, Congressman from Kentucky. The weapon was a rattan cane, and not much injury was inflicted. The affair grew out of a debate in the House last Monday, in the course of which Mr. Grinnell attempted to ridicule Rousseau's military career during the rebellion.

By the steamer City of Paris, we have European news of the 7th instant. The proposed conference of Powers to settle the controversy between Austria, Prussia and Italy, has proved a failure. Austria asked too much for France, England and Russia to concede. Military preparations are going on in all directions. War is now apparently inevitable.

After the Senate had adopted the constitutional amendment just concurred in by the House of Representatives, Gov. Curtin addressed a circular letter to the Governors of all the loyal States, suggesting the propriety of union in action in calling together their Legislatures for the ratification of the amendment. It is now understood that such uniform action will be had, and that before the adjournment of Congress, a ratification of the amendment will be made.

It is said that a majority of the Cabinet were in favor of Jeff. Davis's being paroled, and that it had been so far arranged that the amount of the required security was fixed at $250,000. Horace Greeley, Augustus Schell, Horace F. Clark, R. B. Irwin, and A. W. Elsh, were said to have signed it, but Judge Underwood, sitting in chambers at Washington, has refused to admit Jefferson Davis to bail, on the ground that the accused being a prisoner of war, he had no authority to do so.

European advices by the Scotia are to the 3d inst. It was rumored that a favorable understanding had been brought about between Austria and Prussia, which gave more sanguine hopes of a favorable termination of the Peace Conference. Louis Napoleon in answer to a note from the English Government requesting that he use his utmost influence to prevent a rupture between the parties at issue, had sent to that power the following cutting reply:

"In the years 1859 and 1864, England opposed my proposals in reference to the settlement of the Venetian and Schleswig-Holstein questions. Now England wants peace. I also desire peace, but as the most favorable opportunities have been frittered away, and as the conflicting interests have been permitted to reach a point at which they must clash, I can no longer assume the responsibility of events."

Fenians.

Gen. Sweeny has been released from arrest after giving bail to the amount of $25,000 to appear for trial.

A New York dispatch says it is supposed that both factions of the Fenians will now adopt Stephen's plan of operations.

The President, in response to a despatch from the Hon. George H. Pendleton in reference to the Fenian prisoners in Canada, replies through Mr. Seward, that the matter shall have early attention.

President Roberts has issued a proclamation, advising all Fenian troops to return to their homes, but intimating that a fresh campaign will be inaugurated at no far distant day.

The "Revolutionary Committee of the Irish Republic," at Buffalo, have issued an appeal for commissary stores, "for what purpose, the people can guess." They declare that the cause is not lost nor abandoned, and hope much from Congress, whose action on the 11th has given new life to the movement.

It is positively stated and as positively denied, that British troops crossed the line and captured Fenians on United States territory, several of whom were shot almost immediately. Orders have been issued by Gen. Sweeny and Col. Mehan directing no more troops to be sent to the frontier, and that those already gone forward shall return to their homes. The reason assigned for the failure of the enterprise is the opposition of the United States Government.

Arrests of Fenians by the Provincial authorities continue. Among these, a leading Irishman, Johnny Maguire, of Montreal in his house were found important papers implicating others, and giving full lists of two Fenian companies in Montreal. At Cooksville, Davey Hammill has been captured with a Fenian song-book in his pocket and treasonable language in his record. The Hamilton Spectator contains Col. Booker's defence for his Ridgeway foot race. He declares he went to the rear on sudden business, and did not expect the Queen's Own to follow him.

An Ogdensburg despatch of the 10th says: "The original plan of the campaign was the invasion of Canada from this point and a march upon Ottawa. Steamers had been employed which would be able to take over 1,000 men each. The landing point selected was Maitland, six miles above. Upon the landing of the expedition and the firing of a signal gun, every piece of artillery mounted upon Fort Wellington, at Prescott, and every gun in the village, would have been spiked by men inside the fort and the British lines. The time for carrying this plan into execution was Tuesday night, the 5th. The arrival of the United States troops on Monday, and Gen. Meade's presence, defeated the whole scheme. Spies had been on the Canada side, and perfected arrangements which gave a flattering promise for success. The Fort Erie affair was intended as a feint to draw the English troops west and insure the success of the plans."

Southern News.

The number of pardons issued since the close of the war is reported at 12,515.

A rattlesnake, eight feet long, was killed by the police in New Orleans on the 11th, in a gutter in the heart of the the city.

In Augusta, Ga., on the 5th, a school house was blown down and seven children were killed and nine wounded.

Prominent North Carolinians say that their State will be the first to accept the new constitutional amendment.

Gov. Patton, of Alabama, is about to visit Chicago to buy corn to supplement the food issued by Government to destitute families in that State.

The bones of some Federal soldiers buried near Atlanta were recently uncovered, broken to pieces, and strewn along the surface of the ground. The deed is supposed to have been done by guerrillas.

A small keg of nitro-glycerine exploded in a drug store at Nashville on the 13th. The quantity was not sufficient to do much damage, but windows, bottles, chairs, &c., were broken.

The trial of Major John H. Gee, former commandant of the rebel prison at Salisbury, is still in progress at Raleigh, North Carolina, and will not be fully closed for two months. The expense of the trial is estimated at $250,000.

Geo. M. Gale, the man who two years since advertised for contributions to a fund of one million dollars to be used in procuring the assassination of President Lincoln, has been indicted for murder and conspiracy against the Government, and held to bail in the sum of $15,000.

Ashbury Paine, who murdered a man named Brooks, at Hopkinsville, Christian county, Kentucky, in 1862, was accidentally recognized as a Conductor on one of the Portland street horse cars, in Louisville, and was arrested and committed to jail. He has already been identified by a dozen witnesses.

A fearful accident occurred to the down mail train on the Richmond and Danville railroad, near Coalfield, on the 12th, caused by the breaking of a switch rod. The ladies car was precipitated over an embankment, making three revolutions, and smashing the car in its descent. Mrs. Trotter, of the vicinity of Danville, was instantly killed, and 13 other persons were wounded, among them Bishop Early of the Methodist Church.

Two men were arrested at New Orleans on the 14th, charged with complicity in the assassination of President Lincoln. One has confessed to following in the rear of Booth, in order to draw off whatever pursuers might come. The other prisoner claims to have nothing to do with the affair. One gives his name as John Carey, and the other as Henry P. Hammond. Both are strangers in the city.

A grand wedding occurred at Mobile on the 11th, at the African church. Samuel Jackson, a negro man, once the slave of General Beauregard, married a white schoolmistress. The house was crowded with negroes fantastically dressed. The friends of the pair afterwards participated in a banquet at the house of the bridegroom. The newly married pair left on an early train to visit the bride's friends at the north. The affair causes much scandal and disgust among the decent portion of the population. The bridegroom is very rich.

Western Matters.

The steamer Magnolia was burned at St. Louis at 3 o'clock on the morning of the 14th. She cost $240,000 one year ago.

Two Germans living in Wells county, Ind., drank each a quart of brandy on a wager, which resulted in the death of one, and all but the death of the other.

The City Marshal of Independence, Missouri, was killed by guerrillas, the other day, for refusing to give up the keys of the jail, where a bushwhacker was confined.

Thirteen hundred tons of telegraph wire for the Collins Russian-American telegraph line have arrived at San Francisco, in the ships Eastern Chief, Mohawk, and Eveline Wood.

Nebraska City papers of the 11th claim that the State organization proposition has been carried, and Union majorities in both branches of the Legislature have been elected.

Four small boys, living near Loda, Ill., found a bottle of arsenic in a barn where they were playing, and tasted the contents. One of them died, and the others are in a critical condition.

Subsequently, the Express Company took the matter out of the hands of the police, and sent to Cass county to arrest Faulk's confederate, one of their own men.

Dr. Potter, of Tionesta, Venango county, Pennsylvania, made a wager of $5,000 a few weeks since that he would drive his pair of mares over a country road, to be selected by him, 100 miles in 9½ hours. The event came off on last Saturday week, and the Doctor drove 103 miles and 17 rods in nine hours and eleven minutes and thirteen seconds, stopping once to feed and twice to water, the actual time of traveling being 8½ hours, the best time on record. The animals are a beautiful pair of large bay mares, and they came in, apparently quite fresh, under a strong pull. The Doctor afterwards refused $10,000 for his team.

A law like this has existed for two years in Rhode Island.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S WIVES.

How they Live.

The following is an extract from a book on Mormondom, written by Mrs. C. V. Waite:

"The internal arrangement of affairs at the Harem is very similar to that of a young ladies' boarding school. Each woman having her own room, her affairs are all centred there. The culinary department is under the control of such one of the wives as Brigham from time to time appoints. She is the stewardess, and carries the keys. A cook is employed—generally a man—and several servants besides who are all under the control of the stewardess.

"When the meals are prepared and ready the bell rings, and each woman, with her children, if she have any, files down to the dinner table, and is seated as before stated.

"Each on rising, has her children to attend to, and get ready for breakfast; this over, she commences the business of the day, arranges her rooms, and sits down to her sewing or other work, as the case may may be.

"A sewing machine is brought into requisition, and one of the number appointed to use it For the benefit of those who want a sewing machine, it may be well to state how this one was procured. One day a man from St Louis came to offer one for sale, stating that his price was ninety dollars. Brigham bought it, promising to pay the man whenever he should call. The man being poor, called in a few days. He did not get his pay. He called again, a number of times, with the same result. One of the wives became quite indignant, and said: 'If I was in his place, I never would ask it from one so nigh in the priesthood. He had better give it to him than to ask pay of him.' The poor man never received his money, and, soon as he could get the means, left the Territory. This is the manner in which the Prophet became possessed of much of his property.

"Most of the women spin and make their everyday clothing, doing their own coloring. They are quite proud of the quantity of cloth manufactured in their establishment every year. All work hard, and take but very little out-of-door exercise. Parties and the theatre are the favorite amusements. At the theatre, Brigham and one or two of the favored wives sit together in the 'King's box,' but the remainder of the women and the children sit in what is called 'Brigham's corral.' This is in the parquette, about the centre of the area. The Prophet goes down once or twice during the evening to the corral, and chats for a few moments with one another, but in a short time he can be seen beside his 'dear Amelia' again.

"At the Mormon parties much gayety prevails. Appearances are maintained, somewhat, by paying more respectful deference to the first wives on such occasions. Gentiles with whom the Saints are on good terms are well received and kindly entertained at these parties, and all join in giving themselves up to the influences of mirth and festivity. Dancing is not only a favorite amusement, it is more; it is cultivated to such an extent that it becomes a passion.

"Brigham's women, though better clothed than formerly, still work very hard. They are infatuated with their religion, and devoted to their husband. If they cannot obtain his love, they content themselves with his kindness, and endeavor to think themselves happy. As religion is their only solace, they try to make it their only object. If it does not elevate their minds, it deadens their susceptibilities, and as they are not permitted to be women, they try to convince themselves that it is God's will they should be slaves.

"A music master, a dancing master, and a teacher of the ordinary branches of an English education, are employed in the family school. Also a teacher of French. His children have much better advantages than any other in the territory. Dancing and music are the leading accomplishments, and everything else is made subordinate to these."

The Preciousness of Littleness.

Little martin boxes of some homes are generally the most happy and cozy; little villages are nearer to being atoms of a shattered paradise than anything we know of; and little fortunes bring the most content, and little hopes the least disappointment.

Little words are the sweetest to hear, little charities fly furthest, and stay longest on the wing; little lakes are the stillest, little hearts the fullest, and little farms the best tilled. Little books are the most read, and little songs the dearest loved. And when nature would make anything especially rare she makes it little—little pearls, little diamonds, and little dews.

Agar's is a model prayer, but then it is a little one, and the burden of the petition is for little. The Sermon on the Mount is little, but the last dedication discourse was an honor. The Roman said:—Veni, vidi, vici—I came, saw, conquered—but dispatches now-a-days are longer than the battles they tell of.

Everybody calls that little, that they love best on earth. We once heard a good sort of a man speak of his little wife, and we fancied that she must be a perfect little bijou of a wife. We saw her, and she weighed 210 lbs.; we were surprised. But then it was no joke, he could put his wife in his heart and have room for other things besides; and what was she but precious, and what could she be but little?

We rather doubt the stories of great argosies of gold, we sometimes hear of, because nature deals in litles altogether. Life is made up of littles, death is what remains of them all. Day is made up of little beams, and night is glorious with little stars.

Multum in Parvo—much in little—is the great beauty of all that we love best, hope for most, and remember the longest.

Mark Twain at Honolulu.

"Mark" thus recounts his experience with an eccentric steed, which had been furnished him by the landlord of the American Hotel, Honolulu. The party of which "Mark" was to have made one, had started considerably in advance, on an excursion to Diamond's Head:

The landlord of the American said the party had been gone nearly an hour, but that he could give me a choice of seven horses that could easily overtake them. I said, never mind—I preferred a safe horse to a fast one—I would like to have an excessively gentle horse—a horse with no spirit whatever—a lame one, if he had such a thing. Inside of five minutes I was mounted, and perfectly satisfied with my outfit. I had no time to label him, "This is a horse," and so, if the public took him for a sheep, I cannot help it. I was satisfied, and that was the main thing. I could see that he had as many fine points as any man's horse, and I just hung my hat on one of them, behind the saddle, and swabbed the perspiration from my face, and started. I named him after this island, "Oahu," (pronounced O-waw-hoo). The first gate he came to he started in; I had neither whip nor spur, and so I argued the case with him. He firmly resisted argument; but ultimately yielded to insult and abuse. He backed out of that gate and started for another one on the other side of the street. I triumphed by my former process. Within the next six hundred yards, he crossed the street fourteen times, and attempted thirteen gates, and, in the meantime, the tropical sun was beating down and threatening to cave the top of my head in, and I was literally dripping with perspiration and profanity. (I am only human, and I was sorely aggravated; I shall behave better next time). He quit the gate business after that, and went along peaceably enough, but absorbed in meditation. I noticed this latter circumstance, and it soon began to fill me with the gravest apprehension. I said to myself, this malignant brute is planning some new outrage—some fresh devilry or other; no horse ever thought over a subject so profoundly as this one is doing, just for nothing. The more this thing preyed upon my mind, the more uneasy I became, until at last the suspense became unbearable, and I dismounted to see if there was anything wild in his eye—for I had heard that the eye of this noblest of our domestic animals is very expressive. I cannot describe what a load of anxiety was lifted from my mind when I found that he was only asleep. I woke him up and started him into a faster walk, and then the inborn villainy of his nature came out again. He tried to climb over a stone wall, 5 or 6 feet high. I saw that I must apply force to this horse, and that I might as well begin at first as last. I plucked a stout switch from a tamarind tree, and the moment he saw it he gave in. He broke into a convulsive sort of a canter, which had three short steps in it and a long one, and reminded me alternately of the clattering shake of the great earthquake, and the sweeping, plunging of the Ajax in a storm.

If you get into conversation with a stranger in Honolulu, and experience that natural desire to know what sort of ground you are treading on, by finding out what manner of man your stranger is, strike out boldly, and address him as "Captain." Watch him narrowly, and if you see by his countenance that you are on the wrong track, ask him where he preaches. It is a safe bet that he is either a missionary or captain of a whaler. I am now personally acquainted with seventy-two captains, and ninety-six missionaries. The captains and ministers form half the population; the third fourth is composed of common Kanakas and mercantile foreigners and their families, and the final fourth is made up of high officers of the Hawaiian Government. And there are just about cats enough for three apiece all around.

A solemn stranger met me in the suburbs yesterday, and said:

"Good morning, your reverence. Preach in the stone church yonder, no doubt?"

"No, I don't. I'm not a preacher."

"Really, I beg your pardon, captain. I trust you had a good season. How much oil ——"

"Oil? Why, what do you take me for? I'm not a whaler."

"Oh, I beg a thousand pardons, your Excellency. Major-General in the household troops, no doubt. Minister of the Interior, likely? Secretary of War? First Gentleman of the Bed-chamber? Commissioner of the Royal ——"

"Stuff! man. I'm no official. I'm not connected in any way with the Government."

"Bless my life! Then, who the mischief are you? what the mischief are you? and how the mischief did you get here, and where in thunder did you come from?"

"I'm only a private personage—an unassuming stranger—lately arrived from America."

"No? Not a missionary! not a whaler! not a member of his Majesty's Government! not even Secretary of the Navy! Ah, Heaven! it is too blissful to be true; alas, I do but dream. And yet, that noble, honest countenance—those oblique, ingenuous eyes—that massive head, incapable of—of—anything; your hand; give me your hand, bright waif. Excuse these tears. For sixteen weary years I have yearned for a moment like this, and ——"

Here his feelings were too much for him, and he swooned away. I pitied the poor creature from the bottom of my heart. I was deeply moved. I shed a few tears on him, and kissed him for his mother. I then took what small change he had, and "shoved."

Taken at His Word.

A few years ago, says the Schenectady Sun, when it was the custom for large girls and larger boys to attend district schools, an incident took place in a neighboring town which is worth recording. One of the fairest and plumpest girls of the school happened to violate one of the teacher's ties. The master, a prompt, energetic fellow of twenty five, summoned her into the middle of the floor. After interrogating the girl for a few moments, the master thundered out:

"Will you give me your hand?"

"Yes, sir, and my heart too," promptly responded the girl, at the same time stretching forth her hand to the master, and eyeing him with a cunning look.

A death-like silence reigned for a moment in the school; a tear was seen to glisten in the master's eye; the ruler was laid upon the desk, and the blushing girl was requested to take her seat, but to remain after the school was dismissed. In three weeks after the school was finished, and the teacher and the girl were married.

.....A well-known barber of Buffalo, made up his list, amounting to $537, and handed it in at the office of Internal Revenue. The clerk glanced at the footing, and replied, "No tax on incomes below $600."

Some few minutes later, noticing S. standing patiently, the clerk inquired:

"Waiting for anything?"

S.—"My $63."

Clerk.—"What $63?"

S.—"Why my income was only $537, and I understood the government would make it up to me."

.....The editor of the Montezuma Republican is responsible for the following:

"We have on exhibition at this office the greatest natural curiosity of the age. It is nothing more nor less than a mosquito's bladder, containing the souls of twenty government swindlers, and the fortunes of a dozen or more editors, which had been accumulated in publishing country newspapers. The tarnal thing is nearly half full.

Art and Science.

—Napoleon never smoked; and Goethe said that a man of true genius cannot cultivate science and his pipe together. There may be a few illustrious exceptions, but they only prove the correctness of the rule.

—The force of the explosion of gunpowder is greatly increased when the powder is previously heated nearly to its point of decomposition. This may partially account for the bursting of guns after long firing —The temperature at 22,000 feet above the sea is about 72¼ degrees lower than at the surface, which gives, supposing the decrease to be uniform, a diminution of about 1 degree for every 300 feet of ascent.

—By carefully attacking glass with hydrofluoric acid microscopic crystals are developed, which proves that we are not yet acquainted with the true composition of this substance. The crystals vary with different glasses.

—A late attempt to find the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, by running a tunnel into a large mound outside the city walls, has failed. The recovery of the Odeon is progressing, and the marble is as bright as if just polished.

—About one year in five is subject to the dry extreme, and one in ten to the wet extreme. The dry years are uniformly hot, and the wet years cold. The present, then, should be a wet year in this section of the United States.

—In ascending into the air, the heart-beats increase 5 for the first 3,000 feet, 7 for the next 1,500 feet, 8 for the next 1,500 feet, and 5 for each 1,500 feet of ascent after that. This is an average increase of 1 beat for each 100 yards of ascent.

—In 1850 the daily water supply of London was 44,383,000 gallons; in 1856, 80,000,000, and 1865, 108,000,000 gallons. Of this the law allows 100,000,000 gallons daily to be drawn from the Thames, though the amount thus taken is really less than this.

—The theory that ozone and antozone are two opposite electrical states of oxygen, and that ordinary oxygen is composed of the two opponents balancing each other, has led to the theory that all matter is in this condition, and several important observations have been made which go to sustain the view.

—A striking instance of the conversion of motion into heat has been furnished by a turbine water-wheel worked at Lowell, Mass. It rested on a block of case hardened iron, the pin of the shaft being of steel and two and a half inches thick. The turbine suddenly began to run unsteady, and an examination showed that both pin and block were partially fused. And this had occurred though placed in a current of 4,500 cubic feet of water per minute.

—A curious effect of the influence of civilization upon nature is seen in Pennsylvania. The flora of the State is found to have undergone remarkable changes, plants that were formerly rare being now quite abundant. This effect is attributed to the spread of railways, and the change is so marked that some botanists think the "foreign" flora will supplant the native. The valley of the Susquehanna has already been taken possession of by the invaders.

—An engineer has planned a tunnel to connect Hoboken, N. J., with New York city. He proposes a cast-iron tube of five feet internal diameter, in lengths of twelve feet, with spherical joints, to allow for change of position. The bed of the river would have to be levelled by dredging. The tunnel is designed to convey the Erie Railway's freight from its dock at Hoboken to the Duane street pier in New York, and is destined to be worked by the pneumatic method.

—The flotative power of the air-sacs and hollow bones of a pigeon when the contained air is raised to the temperature of the bird's body, is less than a grain weight, a fact which proves that birds are sustained in the air solely by muscular exertion. The air-sacs connected with the lungs are supposed to be for the purpose of keeping up a constant current of air over the capillaries, which are naked in the lungs. They open and contract in alternation with the lungs; that is, they expand when the lungs contract, &c.

—Perhaps the handsomest and most costly residence in the South is situated in Macon, Ga., on the hill leading to Vineville. It belongs to W. R. Johnson, Esq., former President of the Central Railroad, and a gentleman of very large wealth. Both its external appearance and internal decorations are very fine and tasteful. It was just completed before the war. Nobody knows the cost, not even Mr. Johnson himself, who had all the work done under his own eye, from plans made by himself, after studying the principal models in Europe, and in order not to know the amount of his expenditure, he destroyed the bills when paid.

—"Never despair," says Professor Jennet, of Bordeaux; "your coal fields may fail, but acetate of soda will at any rate prevent your noble race from perishing during that gloomy British winter." This substance affords, in fact, says the Professor, a means of "storing up the solar heat." Its peculiarity is, that while it crystallizes when exposed, in solution, to a very slight degree of cold, it will cool without crystallizing if placed in a closed vessel. Cooling thus, it retains the greater part of the calorie which it had absorbed while being melted; any this caloric is given off the moment the bottle is uncorked or the jar uncovered. M. Jeannet has proved it.

Domestic Paragraphs.

—A boy named Renick robbed his grandfather at Hebron, Ohio, last week, of $7,000 in United States bonds, and then went to Columbus on a spree, spending $1,000 of the money ere he was caught.

—The daughter of a wealthy man in Jersey City last week made preparations to elope, and threw her dresses out of the window where her "young man" stood in waiting to carry them off. No sooner had he seized them, however, than an officer seized him, and, instead of sleeping in a bridal bed, he occupied quarters in a public institution.

—The following, from the Denver (Colorado) News, will serve as a specimen of how editors in that metallic region extend a welcome to their returning citizens:

"Our respected townsman, Mr. George Tritch, returned from the East in last evening's coach. He has on a fine suit of States clothes, including a plug hat, and is the dog-gondest looking cuss we have seen since Jim Ford left. We are glad to see him back again, however, and hope he will now settle down and behave himself.

—The late issue of the Napa County, (California) Register has a singular story: "A family residing in the Napa valley has within a few years past lost five of its members by death. By some curious coincidence, a friend residing in San Francisco has, at each decease, been on a visit to the family, and the fact has been so remarkable as to attract notice, and, in the minds of some, create a superstitious dread of him. 'What misfortune do you now bring?' Apparently in good health at the time, in an hour after she was a corpse. Recently he paid his accustomed annual visit, and a daughter in law, who had been lingering with consumption for some time, died soon after his arrival. No blame is attached to him as an instrument in causing these deaths yet that singular fatality to the family has been attendant upon his periodical visits is most remarkable. In Italy the superstitious people would believe him to possess the fatal gift of the 'Evil Eye.'"

—Lydia Ann Powell, 12 years old, was arrested in West Chester, Pennsylvania, recently, for trying to murder the Mackey family, by mixing particles of broken glass in their food.

—Mr. Thomas Gazley, of Bastrop county, Miss., was handling a rail lately, when he was bitten by a moccasin snake on his fingers. He immediately thrust his finger into his mouth, and, by sucking, abstracted so much of the poison that his hand did not swell, although he suffered severely for a day and night.

Foreign Gossip.

—The latest Parisian invention in the way of adding from the resources of art to the attraction which nature has bestowed upon the fair portion of the human race, is false eye lashes.

—A phrenologist has been examining Queen Victoria's head. He says she found the bump of adhesiveness sadly deficient, if it existed at all. In justice, however, to this gentleman, we will state that the queen's head under examination was a postage stamp.

—Among the Emperor's improvements in Paris is the levelling of the Hill of the Trocadero. The ground is mined, and four mines are sprung at once by an electrical battery. About two acres are raised at each explosion, and the cars are ready on a temporary railway to carry off the earth thus loosened.

—A correspondent writing from Paris gives the following: "We learn from an authentic source that Napoleon the Third, when talking a few days ago with some of his deputies, informed them that he was going to make a last attempt in order to regain the natural frontiers of France, and that when this was accomplished, he would abdicate, hand the reins of government to his son, and restore liberty to France."

—A London paper says: "In a large glass case, standing in one of the upper chambers of our great national museum, is to be seen the skeleton, decently encased in its original burial clothes, of one Pharoah Mykerinus, surrounded by fragments of the coffin, whereon the name of its occupant can be easily read by the Egyptologists of the present day, affording thereby conclusive evidence that it contained the mummy of a king who was reigning in Egypt more than a century before the time of Abraham."

—A City of Mexico letter says: "It is rumored that Max and the amiable Carlotta have had a 'little quarrel.' It seems that Max, after dinner one day, took Carlotta aside, and, after telling her she was just the kindest 'little woman' in the world, asked her to lend him a 'trifling amount of two or three hundred dollars out of her own purse.' This delicate insinuation 'the dear little Carlotta' listened to with great good humor, and then, patting Max on the cheek, said, "No you don't,' and she did not lend it to him. Then Max, taking umbrage, and a friend or two, went to Cuernavaca. This little piece of scandal is going the rounds, and for 'effect,' as we can plainly see."

—A London letter says: "Nobody here cares anything about the threatened European war, except the Princess Mary of Cambridge and Prince Teck, whose approaching marriage is the great sensation. He is an Austrian nobleman, commands a regiment in his Emperor's army, and on the outbreak of hostilities may at once be ordered to join his corps. The Princess is very naturally anxious. She has long been in the market. She has already lost Victor Emanuel, the Marquis of Hastings, and other nobilities. She grows stouter and stouter every year, and has not, like other ladies, the privilege of concealing her age. That is inscribed on every 'blue book,' and 'red book,' and directory in the kingdom. Even the 'Shilling Peerage,' and the 'Annual Almanac' have it inscribed in fatal and undeniable black and white. She was born November 27, 1833, and is already medieval.

SINCE the bar-rooms are shut up on Sunday, some of the New York barbers have invented a new hair tonic—for the beard—which is applied just under the moustache.

THE Washington Star of a recent date says: "Gen. Banks and Senator Sprague appeared in the new style Hutchinson family shirt collars, to day, eliciting much approbation from the ladies' galleries."

A LETTER from Fortress Monroe says: "Mrs. Jeff Davis is almost daily in receipt of money, sent her by sympathizing friends, through Adams' Express. The express agent tells me that these contributions sometimes amount to $500, and $1,000 per day."

THE Paris correspondent of a Boston paper tells this story: "I heard the other day of a mot of Miss Cushman's. Some one said to her while recently in Paris, 'Miss Cushman, were you born in Boston?' 'If I had not been I would hang myself with my garter.'"

THE Southern journals are not very happy in their allusions to the demise of Gen. Scott. The Richmond Enquirer remarks: "The papers of the North are sounding his eulogies. To the citizens of his mother State, it belongs only to repeat the proverb, De mortuis nil nisi bonum. Let him sleep in peace."

A NEW YORK letter says of Morris Ketchum, the old financier: "He has departed from the abode of his glory and shame. You can see the wreck of 'the firm' stored in a half-fixed and rather small room. A mighty financier prostrated by the criminal folly of a boy? The old man's face is sadly changed. There are faint traces of the former fire; but the proud bearing has departed."

THERE are two Unitarian churches in Chicago. The pastor's names are Collyer and Collier, and are pronounced exactly alike. Both were Methodist ministers before they became Unitarians. The former's initials are R. L., and the latter's R. Both are Roberts. Not long since the latter, who is an Englishman, received by mistake a letter belonging to the former, which he remarking that there was no "(HE)L in his name, or yell in his theology."

WHEN the now famous Gustave Dore, whose illustrated Bible is so popular, was in school, he paid but little attention to his books save to illustrate their margins. He had the burlesque spirit then. His father, an engineer, deplored his son's indisposition to study, and went with him to one M. Philisten, who appreciated the genius of the lad, and who, in order to convert the family by a practical argument, said: "I undertake to make him earn annually 6,000f. from today." Mr. Dore's income now amounts to 50,000 f., and he is still a very young man.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Tribune, writing from the City of Mexico, says: "The Emperor, a man of thirty-seven years old, is one of the largest men in the city; tall straight, and well proportioned, an expert in all manly exercises, especially as a horseman and swordman, and possessed of immense physical strength, which, when he chooses to exercise it, excites the admiration of his staff and the French Zouave officers, nearly all of whom have been raised from the ranks for signal acts of daring, in which bravery and personal endurance were required. His face is broad, refined in its expression, and beaming with good humor; and above all, there is a look of genuine benevolence and kindness which seldom fails to win those with whom he comes in contact. The large blue eyes full of intelligence, while the high expansive forehead indicates a great brain and correct judgment. He is seldom mistaken in his estimate of men, whose character he generally penetrates at the first interview. While Governor of Lombardy several years ago, much as the Italians detest the Austrian rule, their public disturbances could always be quelled by the presence of Maximilian, who was looked upon as an exception to the House of Hapsburg. He is the author of a number of scientific works which have been printed in three or four languages, and is regarded as among the most accomplished and enlightened of the German princes."

Religious and Educational.

—Rossini has written to the Pope, praying him to remove the interdict which prevents the employment of female voices in most of the churches of Italy.

—Bishop Hopkins, of Vermont, Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, and his wife, celebrated their golden wedding last week. He is 76, and both are hale and hearty.

—At the recent Session, in New York, of the General Synod of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church, a proposition to strike out the word "Dutch" from the name of the denomination was favorably received, and a committee, composed of three ministers and three elders, was appointed to consider the matter, and report at the next meeting of the General Synod.

—A man by the name of William Carter has been for some years doing a wonderful work in London and vicinity. He is a "master chimney sweeper, a short, thick set, pleasant man, with small, twinkling eyes, that seem to preach happiness, and a high forehead, indicative of abilities of no ordinary cast." He leased the Victoria Theatre, in London, where, for twelve months, he has preached to a congregation of 3,000. He has now leased also Victoria Hall, in the immediate vicinity. By the help of others, whom he has initiated, and associated with himself he has sometimes nine preaching places open on the Sabbath, in various parts of London.

Gen. Scott's Temper.

That Gen. Scott was of hasty and irascible temper in these latter years no one knew better than himself. That he was as ready to recall as to utter an unjust rebuke is not, perhaps, as well known to the public as it should be. I was witness, accidentally, to an incident illustrative alike of his impatient spirit and real gentlemanhood. It occurred while he was yet commander in chief though, I cannot fix the exact time. His office was on Seventeenth street opposite the War Department. His carriage stood at the door one afternoon as I passed, and discovering at the instant that he was coming out for a ride, I paused to see him. Kind enough at heart, and thoughtful of his troops when in service, he permitted no undue familiarity on the part of his soldiers, and required proper observance on all occasions of his rank and position. The regulars knew this well enough, and were not likely to offend in this regard. His peculiarities were very little known, however, to the volunteers. As he came out of the door of the building in which headquarters were at this time, an orderly stepped up with, as it appeared afterwards, a letter from one of the bureaus of the War Department, which he had been directed to deliver to Gen. Scott at once—of course to his adjutant-general or chief of staff. The willing but not well-learned volunteer interpreted his order literally however; and carelessly giving the salute, began: "Oh, General, here's a paper I want you to look at before you———." The haughty veteran of nearly four score seemed dumbfounded for just one or two seconds, and then straightening to his full height, and raising his cane—with a sudden sweep of the arm—I think he had a cane—he exclaimed in a weighty voice, "Clear out, sir—clear out!". The astonished orderly sprang away, and the General passed to his carriage and was driven off. The letter was taken charge of by the orderly on duty at the office, and the other slowly walked on. The carriage was driven no more than twenty or thirty rods before it turned about, and the driver called to the unfortunate orderly. He, of course, met it hat in hand and fear in every quivering muscle. He was beckoned to the door, and the general asked his name and regiment—as he told two or three of us immediately afterward. He gave both and the general answered, "Well, sir, report to your colonel that you were guilty of gross disrespect to Gen. Scott as an officer, and that Gen. Scott was guilty of gross disrespect to you as a man. Gen. Scott begs your pardon. Go to your duty, sir."—Wash. Cor. Boston Adv.

Victor Hugo.

A pleasant anecdote about Victor Hugo's habits is told at great length in the "Petit Revue" by a neighbor of his, as long ago as 1848, when both had chambers on the Place Royale, and occasionally met at one Brassier's a barber and hairdresser of that quarter:

Going in to be shaved one morning, I said "Well Monsieur Brassier, how is business to-day?" "Excellent, sir, excellent; more than I can attend to. Balls and parties everywhere. Here, you see, is a list of thirty young ladies whose heads are to be shaved between now and evening."

Dropping in at Brassier's a few days after, I asked "and how did you get on with your thirty lady customers the other day?" "Don't speak of it; couldn't attend to more than half of them, and lost a dozen or so of good customers, all because of Mr. Victor Hugo." "But how did Victor Hugo have anything to do with it?" "Why this was the way of it, sir: Five minutes after you left, in he came and seated himself in this very chair. I put the napkin about his neck and was on the point of putting my brush to him, when suddenly waving off my hand, he cried out, 'wait a minute,' and with that he took out his pencil, and began fumbling in his pockets for something he did not find. Then all at once, seeing a sheet of paper on the table there, he took possession of it and fell to writing. In spite of the hurry I was in, I was willing to wait for him to finish; but he, without paying any more attention to me than if I had been at the other end of the town, kept scratching on, stopping now and then to bite the end of his pencil. Write away said I to myself, but if you can read it afterwards you are a lucky one. It was a horrible scrawl, sir, you may believe me. And they pretend he is a great writer! Then I said to him respectfully, 'when are you ready, sir?' 'In a second,' says he, and he goes on with his scribble, stopping for a minute to look up at the ceiling, and then at it again; I meanwhile, you understand, with brush and soap cup in hand, ready to work. Finally I ventured to say: 'Beg pardon sir, but I am extremely busy to-day.' 'O, busy, are you? so am I,' and with that he got up and went out. 'You have forgotten your hat,' said I. 'Why to be sure,' says he, with a smile, and clapped it on, and went without being shaved. 'Now, boys,' I called to my journeymen, you have not a minute to lose; you will go straight to the addresses I give you. This list is here—but where is the list? What have you done with the list?' 'It was on the table a moment ago,' said one of the boys. 'Are you sure?' 'Perfectly.' Will you believe me, sir, it was on the back of that list that Mr. Victor Hugo had been writing; and he carried it off with him all covered with his quail tracks, and that is the way I lost my thirty customers."

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

A CORRESPONDENT of the American Agriculturist salts his rats by laying it on the stills where they can get it, and thus saves his harness.

M. DUCHARTRE, a Frenchman, who has been investigating the rate of growth in plants by day and by night, considers that the greatest increase in length takes place at night.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Rural New-Yorker protects his vines from bugs by covering them with a newspaper, which is elevated over the plants by three or four sticks stuck in the ground, the paper being held in place by hauling earth upon its edges. The paper is not removed till the plants find their way out by their growth.

AT a sheep shearing festival held at Medina, Ohio, on the 5th inst., a trial was made of Davis' Patent Sheep Shearer. The result of the trial is given by the committee as follows: One sheep, time thirty minutes, two men; sheep turned over to a hand shearer to trim; sheep badly shorn; fleece badly torn; sheep and wool badly cut and the shearer severely if not mortally wounded, and turned over to the attending surgeon.

HOW TO CURE A FELON.—As we often see friends suffer with these very troublesome things, we publish the following cure for them, which we have heard highly recommended: As soon as the parts begin to swell, get the tincture of lobelia, and wrap the part affected, with cloth saturated thoroughly with the tincture, and the felon is dead. An old physician says he has known it to cure in scores of cases, and it never fails if applied in season.—Journal of Medicine.

THE Hon. J. Stanton Gould, President, and Col. B. P. Johnson, Secretary, of the New York State Agricultural Society, have prepared a most important circular, from which the following extract is taken: "We do hereby make known the existence of rinderpest, or pleuro-pneumonia, among the cows in the stables of New York and Brooklyn, and earnestly advise all purchasers of stock to examine those which are offered for sale, with reference to this disease. We also advise that, in case the disease make its appearance in any herd, the sick animal be at once and rigidly separated from the rest. The period of incubation of this disease varies from forty-two to sixty days. It is well ascertained that this disorder is strictly infectious. It never occurs where the animal has not come into contact with a diseased animal. The meat of animals suffering from pleuro-pneumonia is dangerous when used as human food. It is very probable that the diseased herds, which are now being excluded from the city, will be offered for sale at very low prices to farmers. This contingency calls for additional precautions on the part of purchasers."

GRAPE HINTS.—Grapes coming in bearing should not be permitted to perfect large crops of fruit while young. It is excusable to fruit a bunch or so on a young vine, "just to test the kind," but no more should be permitted until the vine has age and strength. Vigorous growth, and great productiveness, are the antipodes of the vegetable world. Encourage as much foliage as possible on the vines, and aim to have as strong shoots at the base as at the top of the cane; this can be done by pinching out the points of the strong shoots after they have made a growth of five or six leaves. This will make the weak ones grow stronger. Young vines grow much faster over a twiggy branch, stuck in for support, than over a straight stick as a trellis, and generally do better every way. Where extra fine bunches of grapes are desired pinch back the shoot bearing it about four or five inches above the bunch. This should not be done indiscriminately with all the bunches. Too much pinching and stopping injures the production of good wood for the next season.

These hints are for amateurs, who have a few vines on trellises; for large vineyard culture, though the same principles hold good, so far as they go. They will vary in their application.—Gardener's Monthly.

Habits of Bees.

1. Bees, in common seasons, in hives of 2,000 cubic inches, will be likely to send out one or more swarms annually until the locality is fully stocked with colonies.

2. In hives of this capacity, and with the locality fully stocked with bees, they will give but an averge of about 10 lbs. of surplus in boxes, in common seasons.

3. They will consume 60 lbs. or more during the breeding season and Winter, giving one seventh to the keeper and consuming six-sevenths.

4. From one to three weeks time is lost by them in preparation for swarming, so far as gathering surplus is concerned, and this is the very heart of the honey season.

5. In the construction of their cells and building their comb, they will arrange for brood and their Winter's home in the center of their hive. In taking up box hives, the good, clear honey is found in the top of the center sheets, and in the whole body of the side sheets. And the outside sheets in movable comb frames are the sheets saved for surplus.

6. If there is plenty of room in the hive for all the colony, and all the stores they can gather, they will not be likely to swarm. Mr. Quimby says of the large hive,—"The swarms will not be proportionably large when they do issue, which is seldom."

7. The best arrangement for storing surplus is in boxes of the capacity of from five to ten or twelve pounds, with glass sides sufficient for a fair inspection of the honey. Jasper Hazen, in Rural New Yorker.

The Cow in the Family.

If you have means, and wish to live pleasantly, get you an Alderney cow. She will make the richest and sweetest cream and butter, and of course milk, of any. They are worth having, these little docile, quiet animals, seeming more like members of the family than anything else, though apt to be mis-shapen, brindled or spotted, and pale at that—thin necks, like deer, and heads the same, but yet very gentle—different from all other cows.

Next to the Alderney for milk, and giving more, but not so rich, is the Ayrshire—a most noble breed for the dairy, and most excellent in the family. There is more pride to be gratified in such a cow. She is sleek and round and most excellently formed, having all the points perfect. The Devons are rivals to the Ayrshires, and will be an honor to any family.

Either of these will do, or even a "native," though these are the ugliest of all cows—pitched rump, cramped and disfigured and sometimes vicious, sometimes very docile, varying much in all the points of a good and bad cow. You must run your risk with native breed. But when you get a good cow, of whatever breed, then abide by it. Get a gentle one, and she will not be worried by dogs; she will not trouble you or the neighbors either. You will sleep content for all Brindle will do—for she is intelligent and knows what you want, and does it to please you and mother that takes such good care of her—of this other mother, as the cow is. You get an affection for such a cow, and that is a great benefit. You will then treat her well, and she will treat back in return. Such a cow, of course you will not part with, for you could not dispense with even her company, to say nothing of the immense amount of milk, the real stuff and sinew of the family, that she gives you. We have experienced these things, and we know how to appreciate a good cow.—Cor. Rural World.

Brittan's Lightning Conductor.

An Important and Satisfactory Endorsement.

A short time since, says the Chicago Tribune, we stated that the Chicago University, by the unanimous action of its Board of Trustees, had decided to place Brittan's lightning conductor on the University buildings. This action was taken by the Board after a critical examination of the merits of the conductor, and with a decided prejudice against it at the commencement of the investigation. The work has been completed by Mr. Brittan, and on Saturday last, the 9th inst., it underwent a thorough examination by the Faculty of the University, who presented Mr. Brittan with the following unqualified endorsement at the conclusion of their labors. This certificate fully substantiates the opinion we have heretofore frequently expressed as to the unqualified merits of these conductors. Upon this point there is now hardly room for discussion.

CERTIFICATE.

This is to certify that the lightning conductor known as "Brittan's Continuous Copper Strip Conductor," has been applied to the buildings of the University of Chicago, after a very careful examination of its merits both by the Faculty and members of the Board of Trustees. We believe that the two distinguishing features of Brittan's rod, viz: its presentation of a broader and continuous surface of metal, and its non-insulation are based on scientific principles and give superiority to this rod over every other. The manner of the application of the rod to the building is most careful and thorough, and the whole job executed to our highest satisfaction.

REMARKABLE CURE OF STIFF KNEE BY ALCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER.—How many persons, from stepping on a piece of orange peel, have been lamed for life. A case which might have been of this kind has just been brought to our notice. A gentleman, from placing the heel of his boot on a piece of orange peel, was suddenly thrown down, and violently sprained his knee. He was six months confined to his bed, though he had the best medical advice. As a last resort a very eminent physician was called in to see if anything more could be done. After examination he said, "My opinion is, your knee will never be bent again." He recommended that the whole leg and knee should be encased in a plaster of Paris bandage, which would accelerate the permanent stiffening of the knee, and said, "the sooner it was done the better." But the patient, before trying this application and having a stiff knee for life, enveloped it in our Porous Plasters, and in less than two months his knee was perfectly cured.

Thirty Lines of Common Sense.

Reader, having glanced over the editorials and the news in this journal, you turn to the advertisements, saying to yourself, "These are published by the writers to serve their own interests." Perhaps so. But it is no less true that it concerns your interests to read these thirty lines. If you are healthy, it is presumed you wish to continue so. If sick, of course you desire to be relieved. In either case it is important to you to know that HOSTETTER'S BITTERS are the safest, surest and best tonic and alterative ever advertised in any country. This is a period of the year when the strongest need an invigorant, for the oppression of heat drains the system of strength faster than the most potent and vigorous organization can recruit it. Therefore, as a preservative of health, as a protection against the devitalizing action of heat and the malaria it produces, you should sustain the good constitution and sound stamina with which Nature has blessed you with this PEERLESS VEGETABLE TONIC.

It can scarcely be necessary to urge upon the weak and ailing the importance of acquiring by safe means the strength which unassisted Nature denies them. All who are thus circumstanced are invited to give the Bitters a trial. Before they have taken the elixir three days, in conformity with the directions, they will acknowledge with gratitude its genial operation. They will find that it imparts mental as well as nervous energy, and regulates all the internal functions admirably. This is the experience of the debilitated and depressed, and in making these statements the proprietors only echo the language of innumerable testimonials.

He was a man of decided ability, and maintained through life a character of strict integrity.

Sad Accident.

On Saturday afternoon of last week, Mr. David McIntyre of Ridgeway, aged 22 years, was drowned while bathing in the Globe Mill Pond. The circumstances attending the sad event, as nearly as we have been able to learn were these: Mr. McIntyre had been working for Jacob Cheever of Ridgeway, upon his farm. He came to the village on Saturday, in company with a son of Mr. Cheever, and upon their way home they stopped at the pond to take a bath. Mr. McIntyre, being unable to swim went round on the east side of the pond where the water was shallow, while his companion went in at the waste gate, where there were several boys in swimming at the same time. On the East bank, where McIntyre was, there is a gradual slope extending some twenty feet into the pond, and at that point the bottom slopes off very abruptly to a depth of fifteen feet. He waded out to this point and went down never to rise again. Some of the boys noticed him when he disappered but thought nothing of it until they saw that he did not come up. They immediately went for assistance, and it was some two hours before his body was recovered.—Benjamin Jones found it by diving—and succeeded by a powerful effort in fetching the body to the surface, when others who were assisting in the search, helped him to take it out of the water.

The body was taken into the Mill and a Coroners Inquest held, after which the jury rendered a verdict of accidental drowning. Mr. McIntyre had a brother living in this vicinity. He was a nephew of Thomas Dixon of this village.

Hot Weather.

Judging from the heigth of the mercury for the past few days one would suppose that dog days had surely come. A. meets B. on the side walk, stops him, draws a long breath and ejaculates "How warm"—just as though B. must be entirely ignorant of that interesting fact. "Our thermometer stands 93 in the shade!" "O that is'nt much—ours has reached 96" and on goes A. to meet another neighbor and go through with the same farce, with all the variations. Every one seems to think that the warm weather effects him more than his neighbors. We can assure our readers that temperature has a soporific effect upon the editorial brain.—It is an excellent time for ice-cream and lemonade saloons but it is terribly wilting on news writers fine shirts and paper collars.

☞ We regret to inform our citizens that owing to circumstances impossible to be foreseen by the committee of arrangements there will be no public celebration of the 4th of July in Tecumseh. What may be accomplished by private enterprise we have no means of knowing.—The committee have exerted themselves to the utmost and can in no wise be blamed for failing to carry out the wishes of those by whom they were appointed. All money collected by the subscription committee will be immediately returned to the donors.

FOURTH OF JULY.—All efforts to have an old fashioned celebration in Tecumseh seems to have failed but Gould & Waldo still continue at their post doing up goods for the million. Another fresh arrival of that cheap tea which we can warrant to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Call soon as it is going fast. Come and examine our stock of sugars, and see for yourselves that this is the place to get Good Goods cheap.

INFANTICIDE AT THE HAVILAND HOME.—A shocking crime was brought to light on the 7th inst., at the Haviland Home, in the Raisin valley. The partially decomposed body of a full grown female infant was found in a cistern on the premises, where, from appearances, it had been thrown by its unnatural mother.—We understand from one of the jurors on the inquest, which was held by Esquire Cook, of Raisin, on the same day the body was discovered, that it was believed that the body was that of a female mulatto infant, which had in all probability been born alive, but immediately disposed of. No clothes were on the body. Attempts to fasten the crime on any one have so far proved unavailing. The coroner's jury returned a verdict in accordance with the above facts.—Adrian Times.

FASHION.

A word commonly employed to comprehend such terms as custom, mode, style &c., might more appropriately, read law and rule; for never monarch exercised more absolute sway than this fickle but exciting, and withal, matronly Dame Fashion. Yet how rarely do her votaries complain of her absolute, though capricious rule. More willing captives, more cheerful subjects, could not be found, to whom it would indeed be a deprivation, did not each recuring season bring new laws and stearner exactions.

The tinselry and glitter, of Paris, has found its way across the Atlantic, and may be seen in the streets, at Church or at home, without apparent thought of its appropriateness. The sober matron and the haughty belle affect it, and the gay dashing Miss sports it in one form or another,—in bands, braids, beads and bugs, in crescents, crosses, crystals and coins—suspended from every possible and impossible point and angle, fastened to the tips of feathers and the ends of leaves, at the centre of flowers, on the bands of gold and velvet, and dotted over illusion vails. If this be the caprice of an hour or the folly of a day, we pardon or at least tolerate it; otherwise we would say it was more becoming to the tawny daughters of the forest.

One of refined, not to say fastidious taste cannot go abroad or even sit at their window, without being shocked at the harmony in the arrangement of colors in dress. Among the colors most absurd by inharmonious contrasts, are red and blue in all their variety of shades. How often are they seen (dis)gracing a dingy complexion. Conceive for instance your dearest (female) friend, attired in a lavender bonnet, brownish yellow crape shawl, and garnet colored dress with black gloves; or of the next dearest, if indeed there are degrees to your regard, with blue dress, magenta shawl, lavender gloves and green silk bonnet! What execrable food for the poet or painter, driving them to create models and combinations for themselves. Unfortunately what constitutes so large a portion of "human nature's daily food," though fortunately for art, into which these absurdities rarely find way; these are all examples from life, nor are they extreme instances of what goes to make up the moving panorama of fashion. True, taste here, as in all other arts, reduces at last to consideration of general harmony, which in fashion, must be taken account of and reconcile a particular mode to one's habits, means, figure and complexion, while fitness of fabric and style are indispensable, but scarcely less so than appropriateness of color. J. B.

☞ The intended fourth of July Celebration here has come to naught. Awing to some unaccountable cause, the Committee have been compelled reluctantly to give up the ades, and consequently the celebration will not go off.—Nothing remains now for our citizens but to stay at home and keep cool or go abroad to celebrate.

There will be grand celebrations at Jackson and Detroit. Every one therefore, that wishes to "go in" on that day will have an abundant opportunity to do so.

The M. S. & N. I. Railroad will sell half fare tickets to any point on the road.

The Tilter.

I saw her but a moment,
'Twas in a "tilting skirt;"
How prettily she sailed along
The charming little flirt!
I saw her but a moment,
Ah! 'twas a pretty sight
To see her tread the crowded street,
With footsteps free and light.

I saw her but a moment,
Yet I swore by the "Old Harry,"
Tho' a pretty thing to look at,
She would never do to marry!
Tho' I saw her but a moment,
Yet I knew she was a flirt;
By the jaunty airs she put on
As she swung her tilting skirt.

The Difference.

Mrs. Partington justly observed that "there is a great difference in some things, especially when they differ," but the following difference differs from all other differences we ever saw.

On the 17th of last May, Wm. Van Camp's residence was damaged by fire, and loss estimated at $293. Sixty days thereafter he received $100 in cash and a note for the balance payable in eight months or ten months after the fire.—April 7th the Photograph Rooms of Mrs. Bissell were destroyed by fire, and she has not yet received a cent of the loss. On the 11th of May, Jerome Cleveland's dwelling burned, and he has not yet received any thing.

One week ago last Thursday, the Dwelling House of E. A. Morehouse, was damaged by fire and on the next Tuesday—five days after—his loss was adjusted and the whole amount $400 paid in cash.

Why this Radical difference in the payment of losses? The explanation is very simple. Mr. Morehouse was insured in the old Phœnix of Hartford—The three former were insured in the Climax.

They who insure for fun, glory and tail feathers, may go where they choose, but they who insure to good reliable security should go and get the "Genuine article" the old Phœnix of Hartford, of S. C. Stacy, Agent.

ATTEMPT AT MURDER AND SUICIDE.—Last week, a girl 13 or 14 years old, gave poison to her father, an aged man by the name of Smith. It is reported that she says that her brother, John Smith, bought the poison and told her to give it the father—that he had money and she could get it if he was dead, and marry a young man with whom she was intimate. John soon left after the poison was administered but was arrested near the Ohio State line, east of Morenci and brought back. On Sunday he was taken violently sick, having taken stricknine, as he has since admitted, which he says he purchased in Adrian. In neither case has the poison proved fatal, the father and son are both nearly recovered. The parties were to have been examined before Esq. Peirson yesterday but the matter was postponed one week. The parties all reside in this village.—Hudson Herald.

DONATIONS FOR EDITORS.—An exchange says Donation parties for editors are likely to become as common as for clergymen. A few months ago the friends of the editor of the Bridgeport Farmer gave him some four hundred dollars in the shape of a horse, buggy, &c. Several weeks since one of the Roundout publishers was the recipient of a very handsome donation, and we see that the editor of the Muskegon News has received a purse from his friends containing four hundred dollars.

☞ Why, Mrs. C, how nice and clean your clothes always look! What kind of soap do you use? Well, Mrs. D., it gives me great pleasure to say that I use the Gold Medal Soap, manufactured by J. Every one who will try it, will say just as I am now telling you.—Try it and be convinced.

RHYME OF THE RAIL

JOHN G. SAXE.

Singing through the forests,
Rattling over ridges,
Shooting under arches,
Rumbling over bridges,
Whizzing through the mountains,
Buzzing o'er the vale—
Bless me! this is pleasant,
Riding on a rail!

Men of different stations
In the eye of Fame,
Here are very quickly
Coming to the same.
High and lowly people,
Birds of every feather,
On a common level,
Traveling together!

Gentlemen in shorts,
Looming very tall;
Gentlemen at large,
Talking very small;
Gentlemen in tights,
With a loose ish mien;
Gentlemen in gray,
Looking rather green.

Gentlemen quite off,
Asking for the news;
Gentlemen in black,
In a fit of blues;
Gentlemen in claret,
Sober as a vicar;
Gentlemen in Tweed,
Dreadfully in liquor.

Stranger on the right,
Looking very sunny,
Obviously reading
Something rather funny.
Now the smiles are thicker—
Wonder what they mean?
Faith he's got the KNICKERBOCKER Magazine.

Stranger on the left,
Closing up his peepers
Now he snores amain,
Like the seven sleepers;
At his feet a volume,
Gives the explanation,
How the man grew stupid
From "Association."

Ancient maiden lady
Anxiously remarks,
That there must be peril
'Mong so many sparks;
Roguish-looking fellow
Turning to the stranger,
Says it's his opinion
She is out of danger.

Woman with her baby
Sitting vis-a-vis:
Baby keeps a squalling,
Woman looks at me;
Asks about the distance,
Says it's tiresome talking,
Noises of the cars
Are so very shocking!

Market women careful
Of the precious casket,
Knowing eggs are eggs,
Tightly hold a her basket;
Feeling that a smash,
If it came would surely
Send her eggs to pot
Rather prematurely.

Singing through the forests,
Rattling over ridges,
Shooting under arches,
Rumbling over bridges,
Whizzing through the mountains,
Buzzing o'er the vale;
Bless me! this is pleasant,
Riding on a rail!

The Cigar Ship.

We take tickets at Fenchurch street for Poplar; and as we go upon the platform, perceive at once that we are in seaport London; none of our fellow-passengers are holiday-makers, and all seem to have something to do in the shipping or manufacturing line. The occupants of our compartment are not even inclined to lose the fifteen minutes which our journey will consume. One old gentleman in the opposite corner is studying a blue book, on the cover of which I see "Merchant Seamen's Act"; and a young man, a draughtsman to some shipbuilder, I suppose, is busily unrolling some drawings, to make them up into a smaller roll. The only exceptions to the general assiduity are myself and the merchant captain next me. I suppose his ship is being repaired, for he seems to have nothing to do or care for, and he and I soon get into conversation. He begins by asking:

"Have you seen the cigar ship?"

"No, I am going to see her. What do you think of her?"

"Why," says our captain, "I think she looks like nothing else but a whale with a Greenwich boat on her back."

"What do you think of her sea-going qualities?"

"I think she is sea-worthy as far as Nore; but if she ever gets into the chops of the Channel, she'll roll like Jack ashore just paid off."

"But, sir," interrupts the draughtsman, who has now arranged his roll to his satisfaction, "by a proper adjustment of the weights, the centre of gravity may be brought so low that she will not roll more than any other ship. I think her worst fault will be pitching, there being so little of the ends under water to support their great weight."

"O yes," replies the captain, "I know very well you shipbuilders think that by your calculations you can find out just how a ship will behave at sea. But put you aboard my craft in a gale, under close-reefed topsails, and you'd find out how little you knew. Why, you wouldn't be able to tell the sky from the water."

After a minute or two, our captain resumes in a milder tone: "What reasons have you, sir, for thinking that the Ross Winans will be steady?"

"My opinions as to the sea-going qualities of vessels are only formed by comparing their respective forms; I cannot pretend to any other knowledge, as I have never been to sea beyond Margate; but I should say that, as the cigar-ship is not really so much unlike other ships in form as she appears to be, she will not be so much unlike them in performance as you anticipate."

"What," says the captain, "not unlike other ships! That's a new theory. I never saw a steamer that I would not rather sail to Australia in than take this new-fangled ship across the Channel."

"Well, you know, captain, that the form of the vessel above water has nothing to do with her stability; and if you take the piece of the cigar-ship that is below water, and compare it with twenty different models of yachts, you will find at least two or three which only differ from it in having a keel and outwater. She will certainly be very much inclined to go off to leeward when under sail, through having no projecting keel to keep her up to the wind; but I do not see that her want of keel will affect her speed in steaming; and it will certainly not affect her stability to a greater extent than can be set aright by ballast."

"Well, you may be right about it," says the captain, "but she will be very awkward to manage, having such a small deck; and at the best, her peculiar form does her no good, and is only a piece of her designer."

But we are now at Poplar; and a walk, first through narrow streets where boat-builders, and oakum-dealers, and pump-makers, and carvers of ships' figure-heads, work and live—and past that old house once inhabited by Sir Walter Raleigh, but now a greengrocer's shop, with nothing but pieces of worm-eaten battered carving here and there to show what it once was—and then by the river-side—and then across the gates which let ships in and out of the docks—and then along the wharves, where piles of timber are heaped up, enough, one would suppose, to build ships for many years to come, and behold we are close to the cigar-ship, and have only to cross a bridge to be aboard it. And what do we think of her? Is she like a cigar, or will our merchant-captain's simile describe her? Imagine a cigar much larger than Anak or Chang would care about smoking—indeed, longer than any of our river steamers; not exactly the shape of an ordinary cigar, having no blunt end, but a point at each end. Now, take a small steamer, and cut off all the part below water, and place the remaining upper part on the middle of the cigar, and you have a a tolerable approximation to the form of the cigar-ship.

Before we go on board, we notice at a small distance from each end what appears to be, and are really, the fins of the ship. Three metal blades are visible near each end and three more, we are told, are out of sight under water. Each set of blades, or fans, forms a screw-propeller, it being intended that the vessel shall go ahead or astern with equal facility. The propellers differ in many respects from the screw of an ordinary vessel—in there being one at each end of the ship, in half of each being out of the water, whereas usually the whole is immersed, and also in the peculiar way in which they are connected with the ship. The engineers say that their six blades, of which, as they revolve, three will be always immersed, will do the same work as the three blades of an ordinary screw. Those pointed pieces beyond the screws are to divide the water as the ship goes ahead or astern; they turn round with the fans, the whole revolving with an axis or "shaft," which extends the whole length of the ship, and turning about a straight line drawn from point to point of the cigar. The ship really ends inside of the screws, and, divested of the screws and points, would look like a cigar with two blunt ends; but the form of the vessel appears perfect to the point, and the blades seem to have been thrust in to the surface. Like the fins of a fish, they are so evidently not parts of the surface as not to take off the effects of its curvature.

On board the ship, we are first shown the engine-room. We go down a staircase so constructed as to put our hats in imminent danger of being knocked in or off, and find ourselves on one side of the engines, which are in the centre of the ship. What an intricate maze of pipes and rods and cranks, all polished to a marvellous degree of perfection! Every cubic inch appears to have been made some use of; and when the engineer, who has volunteered to show us the engines, lifts up a piece of iron in the flooring, we see that the small place beneath is full of pipes and taps also. "Our great difficulty," says he, "has been to find room for everything; we never fitted engines of such great power in so small a space. You can see here," he resumes, "the way in which the ship is put together. This, which you can touch, is the half-inch outside plating. What would they have said a few years ago to having ships half an inch thick!"

He informs us that these half-inch flat iron plates form the skin of the ship, and are kept out to their curved form by iron ribs, which, in the ends of the vessel, are complete circles; but here, where we are roofed in by a deck, they form three parts of a circle, and the ends turn up, and make the upper boat-shaped portion of the ship. The ribs are formed of what are technically called angle-irons, a section being an angle, each of whose two bounding lines is about half an inch thick. An idea of the form of these ribs may be obtained by half opening a book, first dividing the leaves in the middle of the book. One of the covers with its leaves may be taken to represent the leaf of the rib which is next the skin, the other the leaf which is at right angles to it, and imparts the strength required to keep the skin in its proper form. The advantage of this form of rib appears to be that it can be easily fastened to the skin by rivets. The ribs in the engine-room are placed about a yard and a half apart, that being the largest compartment of the ship, and also being subjected to great strains by the motion of the engines.

As the engine is only interesting through being fitted in so small a space, we do not spend much time over it, but ask our guide to show us the next compartment. He says the next is the stokehole; so we mount the staircase, and go down a still more difficult descent into a box about three or four yards square. We notice four furnaces, two on the fore and two on the after side. "You see," says our guide, "there is not much room for stoking, and I can assure you it is very hot here when steam is up, although we have thick doors to our furnace."

"Where do the coals come from?" I inquire. "The coal-bunkers at the side seem very small."

"O, they are stowed under the saloons and cabins; but we can get at them from here. Perhaps you have seen an absurd drawing of the ship in some shop-windows in the city. The artist appears to have seen your difficulty, and has shown the coals in the points beyond the screw. It is true we might have filled the points with coals, but we should never have been able to get them out."

I remark that they seem to have a very small space for water in the boiler.

"Yes, only three inches all round the furnace; and so our pumping arrangements have to be very carefully contrived, so that the boilers shall be filled as soon as the water is turned into steam. I must introduce you to the donkey, this small engine in the corner; his duty is to pump water into the boilers, and to work the ventilating apparatus."

"The ventilating apparatus,—what is that?" I ask.

"The part of it which you can see here is that tube overhead, and the barrel through which it appears to pass. The tube extends nearly the whole length of the ship, and the small pipes convey the hot air into it from the cabins. It empties itself into the barrel, in which are revolving fans. The donkey turns the fans, and thus the air is drawn out of the tube, and expelled through the opening which you see in the barrel. When we have steam up, we are so hot here that the heated air from the cabins is cooling, and we only get the draught on our heads, it is something like having one's feet in a warm bath, and head in a snow-storm."

"And I suppose the donkey works that ballast-machine which I have heard of as one of the curiosities of the cigar-ship?"

"O no; there is another small engine on purpose," answers the engineer. "You know, then, that we have something now in the way of ballast. It is under the engine-room, just in the middle of the ship, and consists of a pendulum of lead weighing about seventeen tons. When the ship is too much on one side, we move the pendulum to the other, and she is righted at once; so you see we shall not roll over and over in the first heavy sea we meet, as people are fond of saying about us. You have now seen all I can show you about the engines; I suppose you will not care about the saloons which are only painted and gilded as they might be in any other yacht, but would prefer seeing the novelties of the ship. If so, I am at your service."

Cheerfully accepting this offer, we ascend to the deck, and go forward. Here is a ladder-way to the smooking-saloon, but just above it we are told to look for the steering apparatus, or rather the part of it which is to be seen above the deck. The compass is in close proximity to it, and it is so suspended as to be unaffected by the pitching of the ship, and to uninterrruptedly tell its tale in storm or calm. The representative on deck of the steering apparatus is a brass handle and axle, the handle something like that we use to set a railway locomotive in motion. The handle turns horizontally, the axel being vertical, and, as we are informed, extending the whole depth of the ship. It is of course impossible to put the rudder in its usual position at the stern of the ship, the stern in this case being one of the cones which revolve with the fans; so where could it be placed and how moved?

This was one of the problems of solution of which the peculiar form of the vessel involved. The rudders (for there is one aft and one forward) are square thin pieces of metal, and if we could see under water, they would appear to project from the keel. One edge touches it, and the other three edges are made sharp like a knife, so as to offer no resistance to the water. The axle, of which we can see the upper end, runs out through a tube to form a connection with the middle rudder, and about it the rudder turns. And having thus settled to our satisfaction the steering question, we ask what next.

"The next interesting thing," says our guide, "will be the anchor, or rather that part of its gear which can be seen on board. To see it, we must pay a visit to Jack's quarter's: here is the boatswain, we will ask him if we can go there."

The boatswain, on being asked, says that Jack has just finished his dinner, and if we don't mind the odor of pea soup, we are at liberty to go; and he'll go with us, as Mr. Jones is wanted ashore. As we walk along the deck, he informed me that "We berth the blue jackets right aft, abaft the cabins, and the stokers forward; but what you'll want to see you'll best see in Jack's quarters."

We accordingly descend another ladder, and first we notice a table in the middle extending the whole length of the compartment. "That," the boatswain informs us, "is the casing of the shaft. You know it is just in the middle of all the length of her, in the way everywhere's, and the shipwrights have had to make tables and steps to ladders out of its casing, anything to hide it, just as the ladies like you to think a sofa bedstead's only a sofa. The men use that table to mess on, and sleep in the berths along the side."

"What! in those places that look like shelves in a linen draper's shop?"

"Yes; there's just height enough between two shelves for a man to get in and drop down inside the boarding in front, which keeps him from rolling out. Talk about over-cramming the people that the railways turn out of their houses; none of 'em are crammed like this I know; but sailors are used to it. But you want to see about our anchors. I don't believe in 'em myself. Our guv'ner thinks they'll hold her by their weight; but I don't think as the skipper trusts 'em much, for he's got a pair of others as a stand by."

We cannot see anything like an anchor, and are decidedly of opinion that a cabin is not the most likely place to find one; but our guide does not leave us to wonder long. He shows us an upright iron tube, something like a small funnel, up which, he tells us, the chain comes from the anchor. Another strange contrivance! The anchor is shaped like a mushroom, and has a hole just its shape cut out of the vessel for it, so that when it is "weighed" the surface of the ship is unbroken, and there is nothing to tell of the existence of an anchor. When the ship is to be anchored, the chain is let go, and the mushroom is dropped into the water to find a hold in the bottom of the sea.

The compartment at the other end of the ship corresponding to the one we are now in is appropriated for the stokers. Although it is much like the other, we go to see it, passing on our way the cooking-place, which is in a house on the deck. We are rewarded for our trouble: the doors between this house and the spaces on the fore-side of it happen to be now open, and we can see one of the ends of the vessel.

The ship is divided into eight compartments, the partitions being made water-tight; and thus hitherto in going from one to another, we have had to ascend to the deck, and descend by another ladder. But now we cannot do this, as we are in the extremities of the ship, beyond the deck. The remaining spaces must be entered through this, and so the usual contrivance of water-tight doors is adopted, the doors being shut upon india-rubber, and screwed close, so that the india-rubber just fills the joints. These compartments are used for provisions and stores. At the end of the next one to us is the bulkhead or partition upon which the shaft turns, and which communicates the power of the screw to the ship. It is made very strong, and is rigidly connected with the ship, it being the part of the ship which first receives the moving force of the screw, and thus has a tendency to move from its position.

"And now for the saloons," says the boatswain: and accordingly we visit them, and see that the engineer's description is correct. Everything is done on the principle of getting as much accommodation as possible out of a little space.

The cabins in which the officers will eat, drink, and sleep are about the size of a compartment of a railway carriage.

"And what do you think of the Ross Winans?" asks our guide in parting; "isn't she a queer fish?"

Without expressing ourselves in such decided terms, it is certain that any one who has seen the cigar ship must allow that in many respects, she is a great curiosity; and whatever may be thought of her chances of answering the expectations of the owners, there can be but one opinion as to the excellent and skilful manner in which every detail has been suited to the general design.

General Cass.

General Lewis Cass, who died at Detroit on the 18th, was born at Exeter, New Hampshire, October 9, 1782, and was consequently nearly 84 years old. In October, 1800, he settled at Marietta, Ohio, he where pursued the study of the law. In 1806 he was elected to the Ohio legislature, and was during the next year appointed United States Marshal by President Jefferson. In 1812 he was appointed colonel of a regiment of volunteers raised to join General Hull at Detroit, and was the first man to step a hostile foot upon Canadian soil. Though absent on an expedition, he was included in Hull's surrender, and was so indignant when he heard of it that, rather than deliver his sword, he broke the blade and threw it away. He was exchanged in 1813 and was first appointed a colonel and then a brigadier general in the regular army. He joined Gen Harrison in July, pursued Proctor after the Perry's victory, was placed in command of Detroit, and shortly afterwards was appointed governor of Michigan. In this capacity he was superintendant of Indian affairs, for all the tribes northwest of the Ohio river, which office he administered very successfully. In 1831 he was appointed secretary of war by President Jackson, and In 1836 he went to France as ambassador of the United States, in which latter office he distinguished himself in the defeat of the celebrated quintuple treaty. In 1845 he took his seat as United States senator for Michigan. In 1848 he was nominated as the democratic candidate for the presidency, and was defeated at the election of Gen. Taylor. Having resigned his seat in the senate during the presidential canvass, he was re-elected in 1849. In 1857 he was appointed secretary of state by James Buchanan, which station he filled until near the close of that administration. Retiring to private life, he has since quietly resided in Detroit. His habits were singularly abstemious, and for his consistent advocacy and practice of temperance he had many admirers among those practically opposed to him. He died on the 80th anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill.

.....A wag entered a store in London, some years ago which had for its sign the "two Baboons," and addressing himself to the propiertor, said—

"I wish to see your partner!"

"I have no partner, sir."

"I beg your pardon, sir, and hope you will excuse the mistake."

"O, there's no harm done; but what made you think there were two of us?"

"Your sign.—'The Two Baboons.'"

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK.

General Intelligence.

Three million of people now in Paris are claimed by the latest census; and a million more "floating," are expected next year at the Exposition.

President Baez is at last on his legs in St. Domingo. The revolutionists are pressing him so closely that it is supposed that he will take to flight very soon.

At Gaudaloupe, in the French West Indies, there has been, up to last accounts, 15,000 deaths among the negroes from cholera which is raging fearfully on that island.

There were rumors at Washington, on the 20th, of preparations for a duel between Stephens and Roberts, in consequence of the speech made by the former on the night previous.

Head Centre Stephens, in a serenade speech at Washington the other night, denounced Roberts and Sweeny as traitors to the Irish cause, and spoke severely against the Canada movement. Most of the Fenians at Washington are said to sympathize with Stephens.

From Mexico we learn that the model rebel colony, of which so much is expected, has been desolated by the ruthless hand of the Mexican guerilla. Their vines and fig trees have been uprooted, and the leaders themselves have been forced to seek protection in the city of Cordova.

The telegraph states that "the President will place no obstacle in the way of the transmission of the Constitutional amendment to the State Legislatures;" but will respond to Congress that in this exercise of his forbearance he "disclaims all agreement with and acquiescence in its provisions."

The President has approved the bill giving bounties to colored soldiers, and pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs. The President has also approved the bill to facilitate commercial, postal, and military communication among the several States. This bill authorizes railroad connections so as to form continuous lines.

The most painful anxiety is felt by her New York owners for the safety of the large clipper ship "Monarch of the Seas," now over forty days overdue from Liverpool. She sailed from that port on the 20th or 22d of March, with over seven hundred emigrant passengers and an assorted cargo. Other vessels sailing about the same time for New York arrived there in 30 or 40 days.

The announcement of the defeat of Cortina, and the capture of nearly all his band by the imperial troops, in Mexico, is confirmed by letters from Vera Cruz. Cortina himself fled with such precipitation that he left behind him some important papers, besides his sword, watch, coat, etc., now in the possession of Gen. Olvera.

President Roberts, accompanied by Maj. Hagerty, arrived at the Metropolitan Hotel, Washington, at an early hour Saturday morning. The object of his visit is to induce the Radical members of both Houses to give their support to resolutions repealing the neutrality laws. He promises that, if the authorities do not quash the proceedings against the Fenians arrested, he will reveal some early arrangements entered into at Washington, which, had good faith been kept, would have prevented such active neutrality on the part of the United States.

From a message sent to the House by the President on the 18th in reply to a resolution of inquiry, it appears that the States of Georgia, Florida and Texas have in their Conventions declared the rebel debt null and void, the Georgia Legislature having also passed an act prohibiting its payment in any way; the Legislature of South Carolina took no final action, awaiting information from the Comptroller General; the Conventions of North Carolina and Alabama passed ordinances prohibiting the payment or assumption of any part of the rebel debt; and the Mississippi Legislature prohibited the Treasurer from paying any debts until authorized to do so by that body. No part of the rebel debt has been paid.

Advices by the steamships Peruvian and China bring intelligence of the actual inauguration of war measures on the part of Prussia. The Prussian troops had entered Holstein, and the Austrian troops at that point had retreated, their commander entering a formal protest against the invasion. The bulk of the Austrian army was at Altona, on the right bank of the Elbe, a little below Hamburg. France had urged the middle German States to remain neutral. Italy was preparing for vigorous warfare upon the first note of actual conflict. Count Bismark has written a most extraordinary note to the Austrian minister, which, in the opinion of the English press, entirely shuts the door to all further diplomacy.....The cholera is raging fearfully in Holland.....It is rumored that a collision has taken place between the Turkish and Roumanian troops.

The latest achievement of Harper, the Kentucky guerrilla, whose lawless exploits are not yet ended, was his visit, with his gang of thirty armed men, to the jail at Bowling Green, Kentucky, on the morning of the 15th, and the forcible rescue of a guerrilla by the name of May, charged with the murder of a Mr. Harris, of Simpson county, during the war. May told them that two others were confined there for horse stealing, and the party went back to the jail and released them also. The bold outlaw is confident of his ability to defy capture, as he takes delight in showing his contempt for all law or officers of the law.

The stakes were $500 a side, and the Champion's Belt. Forty-seven rounds were fought, one of these lasting sixteen minutes, when the sponge was thrown up by the seconds of Aaron, and Collier declared the winner. The fight lasted one hour and fifty-seven minutes, and is acknowledged to have been one of the most stubbornly contested engagements on record. Both of the combatants were terribly punished, the victor more so than the defeated party, and at the conclusion of the battle had to be carried off the field on a stretcher. About 1,000 people from Philadelphia, Boston and Baltimore were present, and it is estimated that from $50,000 to $60,000 changed hands on the result. When the mutilation is greater, the redemption will be in proportion.

A novel insurance case has been decided in Missouri. The question arose upon the following facts proved: A building is insured against loss by fire. It falls down, being heavily overloaded with merchandise; the fall occasions a fire, which destroys the fallen material. Query—Is the insurance company liable? The court decided that the building insured having fallen, ceased to exist as such, and that it ceased to exist by reason of a peril not insured against, and hence that the company was not liable.

The Third National Bank of Cincinnati was victimized out of $3,500, by an Englishman, who arrived in that city not long ago, provided with what passed to be first-class credentials. The box was opened on the 15th, and found to contain No. 3 shot. The rascal tried the same game upon a bank in Indianapolis, but failed.

At present the charges are ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents for amounts under $10, $20 and $30 respectively. Instead of being valid for ninety days, as heretofore, they are now to be valid for a year, and when lost, duplicates are to be issued by Postmasters.

A circular from President Ross reports very gratifying progress made in the organization of the Merchants' Union Express Company. The entire stock has been subscribed by express patrons residing along the great thoroughfares over which this company proposes to extend its lines, and so judiciously distributed as to assure the company a very large business from the day its lines are opened. Contracts for the necessary outfit, wagons, harnesses, safes, &c., have been made, and the articles are being manufactured in various parts of the country as rapidly as practicable. Transit over most of the principal roads has been already secured, on the same terms as those accorded to old express companies, and negotiations with other railroad companies are progressing satisfactorily. It is confidently expected by the officers of this company that its lines of business will be in successful operation from the seaboard to the Ohio and Mississippi rivers early in September next, in time for the fall business.

BISHOP HOPKINS, of Vermont, has written a speedily forthcoming "History of the Episcopal Church."

President's Message.

The President has sent to Congress the following message in regard to the proposed Constitutional Amendment:

I submit to Congress a report of the Secretary of State, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution of the 18th instant, respecting a submission to the Legislature of the States of an additional article to the Constitution of the United States.

It will be seen from this report that the Secretary of State had, on the 16th instant, transmitted to the Governors of the several States certified copies of the joint resolution passed on the 13th, proposing an amendment to the Constitution.

Even in ordinary times a question of amending the Constitution must be justly regarded as of paramount importance. This importance is at the present time enhanced by the fact that the joint resolution was not submitted by the two Houses for the approval of the President, and that of the thirty-six States which constitute the Union, eleven are excluded from representation in either House of Congress, although with the single exception of Texas, they have been restored to all their functions as States, in conformity with the organic law of the land, and have appeared at the national capitol by Senators and Representatives, who have applied for and been refused admission to the vacant seats; nor have the sovereign people of the nation been afforded an opportunity of expressing their views on the important questions which the amendment involves.

Grave doubts, therefore, may naturally and justly arise, as to whether the action of Congress is in harmony with the sentiments of the people, and whether State Legislatures, elected without reference to such an issue, should be called upon by Congress to decide respecting the ratification of the proposed amendment. Waiving the question as to the constitutional validity of the proceedings of Congress upon the joint resolution proposing the amendment, or as to the merits of the article which it submits through the Executive Department to the Legislatures of the States, I deem it proper to observe that the steps taken by the Secretary of State, as detailed in the accompanying report, are to be considered as purely ministerial and in no sense whatever committing the Executive to an approval of the recommendation of the amendment to the State Legislatures, or to the people. On the contrary, a proper appreciation of the letter and spirit of the Constitution, as well as the interests of national order, harmony, and union, and a deference for an enlightened public judgment, may at this time well suggest a doubt whether any amendment to the Constitution ought to be proposed by Congress and pressed on the Legislatures of the several States for final decision, until after the admission of such Senators and Representatives of the now unrepresented States as are now, or hereafter may be chosen, in conformity with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

The Constitutional Amendment.

On account of serious typographical errors, and also on account of its great importance and the popular interest felt in it, we re-publish the Constitutional Amendment upon which the States are now to take action:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of both Houses concurring): That the following article be proposed to the Legislature of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said Legislatures, shall be valid as part of the Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE —. Section 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside; no State shall make or enforce any laws which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed; but whenever the right to vote at any election for electors of President and Vice President, or for United States representatives in Congress, executive and judicial officers, or the members of the legislatures thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

SEC. 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President or Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid and comfort to the enemies thereof; but Congress may, by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

SEC. 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for the payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion shall not be questioned; but neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations, and claims shall be held illegal and void.

A Dreadful Calamity — Two Young Ladies found Dead in a Vault.

One of the most lamentable and shocking casualties we were ever called upon to chronicle occurred yesterday afternoon. About half-past two o'clock, Miss Jennie Brown, daughter of Dr. W. W. Brown, residing on Madison street, a few doors below Eleventh street, together with Miss Sallie Hart, a young lady spending the day with her, left the parlor and their absence was not noticed by Mrs. Brown until a lady caller, about an hour and a half subsequently, went to the privy and returning, told Mrs. Brown there was no floor in the out-house. Mrs. Brown immediately suspected the dire calamity that had befallen her daughter and friend and gave the alarm. As soon as possible, and after considerable trouble, the bodies of the unfortunate young girls were taken from the horrible pit in which their happy lives were sacrificed. Miss Brown was eighteen years of age, and was to have been married very soon. Miss Hart was a year older than her friend, and boarded with her mother, at Mr. Moore's, on Broadway. Mrs. Hart was absent from the city on a day's visit to a friend living a few miles in the country. Both were prepossessing young ladies, and great favorites with their circle of associates. Coroner Gill held an inquest upon the bodies, and a verdict was returned in accordance with the facts.

—One Chas S. Dunlap got himself into jail, the other day, at Zanesville Ohio, for going into the country and poisoning the mouths of horses, then suddenly appearing as a "horse doctor," and offering to cure them for "so much." He ought to be made to take a bit in his own mouth.

—It has been stated that rinderpest, or pleuro-pneumonia, has made its appearance in New York, and that it has been officially announced by the President and Secretary of the New York State Agricultural Society. The statement was erroneous. The officers named announced the appearance of pleuro-pneumonia, but not of the rinderpest, diseases of cattle entirely different in their nature. The rinderpest has not appeared in this country, so far as the knowledge of the officers named extends, and it is hoped we shall escape the scourge.

—There was an elopement in high life in Louisville recently. The Democrat says the young lady retired at the usual hour, but before doing so tied a cord to her wrist, leaving an end of the cord hanging out of the window. At the hour appointed, the impatient lover, unterrified by heaven's artillery, and his ardor undamped by the torrents of rain that were falling, made his way to the abode of his charmer, seized the cord nervously, and gently pulled the belle. The signal was answered by a hundred and forty pounds of female loveliness dropping gently into his extended arms. The party hurried into the carriage, and were driven rapidly to a clergyman's and "jined."

—A New York spiritualist named Emma J. Bulline, has been enlightening New York audiences as to the experience of Gen. Scott in the spirit world. She has seen him dressed in a suit of a pearly hue of white, or a grayish silver shade. A scarf hung pendant from his left shoulder, being held there by three silvery stars as the symbol of his rank. A sword of golden hue hung by his right side. It had a double-edged blade, the handle being studded with diamonds, rubies, emeralds and topazes. Upon his right stood Washington; upon his left stood Wellington; in front of him stood Napoleon; on the left stood the late Czar of Russia. The statesmen who received him were Washington, Madison, Jefferson, Jackson and Taylor. The others were Clay, Webster, Douglas and Washington Irving. They placed a chaplet upon his brow amid the acclamations and anthems of the celestial hosts, and much more of the same sort of spirit intelligence and spiritualistic profanity.

Foreign Gossip.

—Du Chaillu, the great African traveler, sends to the London Times some interesting notes on a tribe of pigmies which he discovered in Western Africa. They resemble the gypsies somewhat in their habits, and gain their livlihood by napping game which they sell in the villages. They average about four feet six inches in height, and are known as the Obongo.

—At Belleville, a northeastern suburb of Paris, recently, an explosion took place in a firework factory while forty-eight people, more than half of whom were women, were employed in the building,—killing twenty-one and wounding eighteen of them. The whole establishment was demolished, and the window glass broken in all the houses within several hundred yards of the locality.

—The Persian conqueror, Nadir Shah, saw the celebrated Koh-i-noor glittering in the turban of the vanquished Mohammed Shah, and proposed in the most friendly sort of way imaginable that they should exchange head-dresses, and as the conquered man preferred that to parting with his head, the exchange was made. Finally, after undergoing similar exchanges for centuries, it has now become one of the crown jewels of England.

—The Bavarian King, a lad over-educated for his intellect, with a passion for music and mystical ideas, has been indulging himself in an escapade. He was missing two days, and was at last discovered by his half-frantic court, riding about on a mountain ridge, where it is supposed that he had gone to meet Herr Wagner, the "composer of the future." The Cabinet threatened to resign unless he came back, and he returned, none the worse for his dreamy experience.

—A determined double suicide, near Paris, has just been brought to light. A river keeper observed the bodies of a male and female floating near the surface. Having brought them to land they were found to be bound together, the man's left arm to the woman's right, while the former had also about ten pound weight of stones in his pockets. They were each elegantly dressed, bore no marks of violence, and had apparently been in the water about a fortnight.

—An unhappy Prussian inventor most lucklessly announced just at the present juncture his discovery of a new explosive cartrige and a terrible explosive bullet, two secrets which it is said will make the Prussian army invincible, and so determined is the government that the secret shall not escape, that the man is guarded night and day by a squad of twelve soldiers; every letter which he writes is inspected, and he is not allowed to communicate orally with any person, except in the presence of his guard. Rather a severe penalty for genius.

—A Honolulu paper of a recent date reports that a seaman belonging to the whaleship Mild, a Brazilian by birth, who had been arrested as a runaway, on being taken on board the ship, seized a hatchet, laid his left hand on the deck, and coolly chopped it off at the wrist joint. When taken to the consul's office he said he was determined not to go to sea, and cut his hand off to prevent going. He declared, moreover, that if he had a knife he would have killed himself. "But you are crazy, are you not?" "No, no more than you are," he replied. The consul ordered him to the hospital where his arm was amputated.

—A terrible series of accidents have occurred at the Lyons races. The last race was a grand steeple chase by the officers of the regiment of Lancers. Six ran. They started too rapidly, leaped the river and the first wall, but at the first wall the Irish horse turned a complete sommersault with his rider, fell on the rider, crushing in his breast, and the unfortunate gentleman's life is despaired of. The second horse stumbled over the first, threw his rider on the head, killing him instantly. The third and fourth horses cleared the wall and went on. The fifth horse stumbled over the first and second horses which lay dead on the other side of the wall, and dislocated his rider's shoulder. The sixth horse likewise stumbled, and his rider was one mass of bruises.

—A London letter says: "There was a great deal of private gossip toward the latter end of last week, to the effect that the intended marriage of the Princes Helena with Prince Christian of Denmark has been broken off, in consequence of his having already contracted one of those curious alliances called morganatic marriages. Whether there be any foundation for the rumor, I cannot say, only this—that it is generally said that he is not only married, but the father of six children; moreover that he still lives with his left-handed wife. Nevertheless the newspapers announced, on authority, last Saturday, that the English Princess is to be united to him on the 5th of July, in the private chapel at Windsor Castle, and the Court milliners and others are now busy preparing for the happy event.' Those who believe the story are indignant that the good Queen should sanction bigamy. It runs in the Royal family of Great Britain, on the male side, any way. George the Fourth was privately married to poor Mrs. Fitzherbert, and, if scandal speak truth, George the Third to Hanna Lightfoot, a pretty Quakeress.

ANNA DICKINSON, in a woman's rights meeting at Boston lately, gave some reminiscences of her early life. She had done hard manual labor, had sewed, taught, copied letters, stood in the store, worked in the Mint, before she chose the platform as a profession. Miss Dickinson brought down the house by the statement that the first money she ever earned was by scrubbing walks in Philadelphia, and that she was actuated to undertake the labor by a determination to obtain the means to buy a ticket to hear Wendell Phillips lecture.

GEN. SCOTT'S headquarters in Mexico comprised two rooms, one opening into the other. In the rear room the General slept. One night, after the General had retired, one of the staff wanted some water. It was in the front room. The evening was warm and the hour late, being near midnight. The officer started to go in in his shirt-sleeves. He was cautioned against the experiment as a dangerous one, for, if the General caught him in his quarters with his coat off, he would punish him. The officer said he would risk it; that the General was asleep and he would make no noise. He opened the door softly, and went on tip-toe to the water-pitcher. He had no time to drink before he heard the tinkle of the bell, and the sentinel outside of the door entered. "Take this man to the guard house," was the brief order, and the coatless officer spent the night on a hard plank under guard.

THE Scientific American says: "The unpleasant odor produced by perspiration is frequently a source of vexation to persons who are troubled with it. Nothing is more simple than to remove this odor much more effectually than by the application of such unguents and perfumes as are in common use. It is only necessary to procure some of the compound spirits of ammonia and place about two tablespoonfulls in a basin of water. Washing the face, hands and arms with this leaves the skin as clean, sweet, and fresh as one could wish. The wash is perfectly harmless and very cheap; it is recommended on the authority of a distinguished physician.

The English Royal Scandal.

The latest sensation in English jurisprudence is a suit pending in the highest court of Britain, before Lord Chief Justice Cockburn and his Associate Justices, involving the legitimacy of the Queen of England, and in effect, as the Attorney General declares, claiming to establish the right of a new applicant to the throne.

The case arises upon a petition by Mrs. Lavinia Janetta Horton Ryves, and William Henry, her son, praying to be declared the legitimate descendants of Henry Frederick Duke of Cumberland, fourth son of Frederick, Prince of Wales, who died in 1851, and left the succession to his eldest son George, afterward George III.

The theory of the case is that Queen Victoria is the daughter of Edward, Duke of Kent, the fourth son of George III., and Charlotte, of Mecklenburg-Strelitz; that, prior to the public marriage of George III. to Queen Charlotte, he had been secretly married, while Prince of Wales, to Hannah Lightfoot; that no divorce was ever obtained from this prior secret marriage, but it was kept secret in order to preserve George III. from the charge of bigamy after his subsequent public marriage with Queen Charlotte. Of this prior secret marriage two certificates are produced, signed by Rev. J. Wilmot as the officiating clergyman, by the parties and by two witnesses, one of whom is William Pitt, afterwards Lord Chatham, and the other a lady then well known as being in the secrets of the Court and Royal Family. If these certificates are genuine, of which there appears to be ample evidence, then it follows that the subsequent marriage of George III. to Queen Charlotte was void; that Edward, Duke of Kent, father of Queen Victoria, was born out of lawful wedlock, and that the succession to the Crown could not lawfully descend through his daughter, the present Queen.

It is also alleged that "two princes and a princess" were the issue of the secret marriage of George III. with Hannah Lightfoot, and upon these and their descendants, had they survived, would devolve the crown. But these having died without issue, the next legitimate descendant is Frederick, Prince of Wales, of whom George III. was the eldest son. His second son, Edward Augustus, died unmarried. His third son, William Henry, left two children who died without issue. His fourth son, Henry Frederick, Duke of Cumberland, was, therefore, in the failure of any legitimate issue of George III., the channel through which the Crown would descend.

This Henry Frederick, Duke of Cumberland, it is alleged, was secretly married to Olive Wilmot, the daughter of the Rev. J. Wilmot, who performed the ceremony, and who also, as we have seen, officiated at the secret marriage of Henry's cousin, George III., while Prince of Wales, to Hannah Lightfoot. From this marriage of Henry Frederick, Duke of Cumberland, to Olive Wilmot, was born a daughter Olive, who married John Thomas Lewas, and of this Mr. and Mrs. Lewas was born the petitioner, Lavinia, who married Mr. Ryves, now deceased, by whom she had one child, the petitioner William Henry Ryves. The court is called upon to adjudge, therefore, in effect that Mrs. Lavinia Ryves is by birth and by law entitled to occupy the throne of England, instead of Mrs. Adelaide Victoria Coburg—born Guelph, and that Master William Henry Rives is Prince of Wales, instead of the young gentleman who was so enthusiastically feted on his tour through this country. The criminality on the part of George III. and the Duke of Cumberland, which the story implies, confirms, rather than discredits it, as the allegations are in harmony with the court gossip and secret history of the time, and with the well known characters of those and other members of the Royal Family.

It was doubtless in consequence of these and other similar secret marriages that an act of Parliament was subsequently passed to prevent secret marriages with members of the Royal Family. But of course this act could have no ex post facto effect upon marriages previously consummated. A vast array of documentary evidence is produced in the case, sufficient, if authentic to establish all these facts, and yet there seems no reason to doubt their truth.

GIVE HIM A TRADE.—If education is the great buckler and shield of human liberty, well developed history is equally the buckler and shield of individual independence. As an unfailing resource through life, give your son, equally with a good education, a good honest trade. Better any trade than none, though there is ample field for the adaption of every inclination in this respect. Learned professions and speculative employments may fail a man, but an honest handicraft trade, seldom or never—if the possessor chooses to exercise it. Let him feel, too, that honest labor-crafts are honorable and noble. The men of trades—the real creators of whatever is most essential to the necessities and welfare of mankind, cannot be dispensed with; they, above all others, in whatever repute they may be held by their more fastidious fellows, must work at the oar of human progress or all is lost. But few brown-handed trade-workers think of this, or appreciate the real position and power they compass. Give your son a trade, no matter what fortune he may have or seem likely to inherit. Give him a trade and an education—at any rate a trade. With this he can always battle with temporal want, can always be independent—and better independence with moderate education, than all the learning of the colleges and wretched temporal dependence. But in this free land there can be, ordinarily, no difficulty in procuring both the trade and the education for every youth, thereby fitting each and all to enter the ranks of manhood defiant of those obstacles which intimidate so many tradeless, professionless young men. Such are the peculiarities of fortune, that no more outward possession can be counted as absolutely secure or protective to men. Hoarded thousands may be swept away in a day, and their once possessors left with neither means of independence nor of livelihood.

NEW METHOD OF SAVING PERSONS FROM DROWNING.—A person may be saved from drowning by the proper use of a man's hat and a pocket handkerchief, which, (being all the apparatus necessary) is to be used thus: Spread the handkerchief on the ground, and place a hat with brim downward, on the middle of the handkerchief, and tie the handkerchief round the hat as you would tie up a bundle, keeping the knots as near the centre of the crown as may be. Now, by seizing the knots in one hand and keeping the opening of the hat upward, a person, without knowing how to swim, may fearlessly plunge into the water with what may be necessary to save the life of a fellow-creature. If a person should fall out of a boat, or the boat upset by going foul of a cable, or should he fall off the quays, or indeed fall into water from which he could not extricate himself, but must wait some little time for assistance, had he presence of mind to whip off his hat and hold it by the brim placing his fingers in-within-side the crown, and hold it so, (top downward), he would be able by this method to keep his mouth well above water till assistance could reach him. It often happens that danger is described long before we are in the peril, and time enough to prepare the above method; and a courageous person would in seven instances out of ten, apply them with success.—Land and Water.

Pennsylvania Railway.

Elegant Coaches—Romantic Scenery—Hotels—Watering Places—&c.

In connection with the Pittsburgh and Fort Wayne, the Pennsylvania Railway constitutes one grand, unbroken trunk line, the shortest, quickest, and most direct between Chicago and all important eastern points.

Passengers taking the Saturday evening train from Chicago go through without delay, arriving in New York TWENTY-FOUR HOURS IN ADVANCE of all rival lines. By a recent arrangement, the celebrated "Silver Palace Sleeping Car" goes through without change. The certainty of its connections and the saving in distance and time by this route (which has but one change of cars from Chicago to Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York via Allentown,) has made it the most popular thoroughfare of all others with the merchants and business men of the Northwest, while the smoothness, cleanliness and unequalled safety of its double track, (stone ballasted) the elegance and perfection of its coaches and equipment, the sublime mountain scenery it traverses in its passage through and over the Allleghanies, and the beautiful and ever changing views along the Juniata and Susquehanna valleys, combine to make this route a favorite for pleasure travel.

The hotel accommodations along this line are unsurpassed. The "Union Hotel" at Pittsburg, is one of the finest structures of its kind in the country; built for the express accommodation of the traveling public; perfect in all its appointments, furnishnishing commodious rooms, luxurious beds, and a table loaded with every seasonable delicacy. The Logan House at Altoona, is another admirably conducted hotel, and the dining stations at other points along the line are unexceptionable in cleanliness, comfort and cuisine.

Especially as a route for recreation and healthful enjoyment, does the Pennsylvania Railway offer extraordinary inducements. Cresson has long been distinguished as one of the most delightful mountain retreats in the country, for its cool, dry, invigorating atmosphere in the hottest summer months, its hunting and trout fishing, its fine hotels and the rare views of wild Allegheny scenery it affords the artist and lover of nature.

Bedford Springs is another charming locality, justly celebrated for the medicinal and restorative properties of its waters. Art has aided nature in doing everything to adorn this lovely spot; its extensive hotel improvements, its highly embellished grounds and promenades rendering it one of the most desirable of all "summer resorts."

Within two hours ride of Philadelphia is the still more fashionable sea bathing resort of Atlantic City, which is built on an island six miles from the Jersey coast. Its superb hotels can accommodate 6,000 persons, and its wide streets and avenues are beautifully laid out and graveled in a manner to make perfect drives and walks. The atmosphere is light, dry, free from dampness or fog (which cannot be said of Newport or Nahant.) Facilities for fishing and boating are abundant, and every delicacy of fish, oysters and game to be obtained in their rarest perfection. The beach is nine miles long, affording a splendid drive, and in view of its numberless attractions it is not surprising that 100,000 persons visited this place during the past season of 1865.

Cape May (one of the most popular watering places on the continent) is distant only 40 miles, and both are reached directly by daily trains, and connected by telegraph with Philadelphia and all points West.

Through tickets over the Pennsylvania Railway, the shortest and only direct route to the above attractive summer resorts, for sale at the Company's office in Chicago, (cor. of Randolph and La Salle Sts.,) and all principal ticket offices in the West.

A USEFUL HINT.—An article in a late number of an English magazine, on the subject of polished glass surface, says: "It is a fact known to the philosophical instrument makers that if a metal wire be drawn through the tube, a few hours afterward the tube will burst into fragments. The annealed glass tubes used for the water gauges of steam boilers are sometimes destroyed in this way, after the act of forcing a piece of cotton waste through them with a wire, for the purpose of cleaning the bore. This will not happen if a piece of soft wood is employed. The late Andrew Ross informed me that on one occasion, late in the evening, he lightly pushed a piece of cotton wool through a number of barometer tubes with a piece of cane, for the purpose of clearing out all particles of dust. The next morning he found most of the tubes broken into small fragments, the hard siliceous coating of the cane proving as destructive as he had previously known a wire to be.

In these times, when glass lamp chimneys are in such wide use, it is of no little importance that the fact should be made known. Thousands of persons who have been in the habit of using wires, table forks, and a lot of metalic articles in the washing of these chimneys, will, in the above stated fact, find the reason of their chimneys so often snapping to peices on the lamp." Glass chimneys which carry a shade affixed to the glass by brass clamps or springs, frequently break probably from the same cause. When no shade is fastened to the chimney it will last for months and probably for years.

Transportation of Freight—A New Plan Suggested.

In New York, at a recent meeting of the Association for the Advancement of Science and Art, a paper was read by the Hon. Lorenzo Sherwood on "Railroads for carrying freight to and from the city of New York."

Having referred to the ineffectual efforts of the Convention held at Chicago and Detroit, having in view the lessening of the cost of freight, Mr. Sherwood suggested what he considered to be a simple plan to remedy the grievances complained of, meet the wishes of the Western people, preserve New York her position as the depot or Western produce, and lessen materially the cost of living to the consumer of that produce throughout the entire eastern country. This plan, he stated, was simply the establishment of double-track railroads, to be owned by joint stock companies, upon which there would be a uniform rate of travel, say of ten miles per hour, or whatever rate of speed would give to the road its greatest freight capacity. Upon such a road he claimed that five hundred trains could pass where fifty trains can pass now, running at unequal rates of speed. A single road of this kind, he claimed, could do more carrying to and from the West, than all the canals, rivers, and railroads upon the present plan, now used as routes of travel. Upon these roads companies owning cars at the various cities on the route should run their freight to its destination, simply paying toll for the use of the road. The lecturer suggested for instance, a line running on the line of the New York Central Railroad. At Utica, Syracuse, and other cities along the route, the people by representative companies, would own their own cars; these they could switch upon the line laden with their produce, thus shipping it through to market. From the construction of even a single line of railroad on this plan, the lecturer stated it as his opinion that a vast economy would be secured, large sums passing into the pockets of the people by the cheapness of living, now swallowed up by the imperfect and confused plan now in existence for the carrying of food, coal, and the other necessaries of life.

The Crooked Pickles.

The sound of brisk steps, the directions in subdued tones, the carefully laid tea-table with its china and silver, all confirmed Minnie Warren's whispered words,—

"We've got company. Ain't you glad, Dede? Uncle Aaron's come."

And good Aunt Lucy had granted the inmost wish of her loving little heart, by allowing her to think herself useful on this great domestic occasion.

"May I get the pickles?"

'Yes; and mind and pick out all the straight ones, dear.'

Away she skipped, and then presently back again, with a plateful so green, so hard, so sure to be brittle, that even fastidious Aunt Lucy was satisfied.

Then Minnie drooped into her little chair, watching for an opportunity 'to take a step for auntie;' and, as she sat, grave lines were drawn upon the serious, thoughtful little face, which drew Aunt Lucy's eyes towards her, busy as she was.

'Why did you tell me to get straight pickles, Aunt Lucy?'

'Oh, because they look a little nice for company; that's all. The crooked ones taste as well, dear.'

Minnie fell back, pondering the idea she could not express.

Presently she spoke again.

'Aunt Lucy?'

'What, dear?'

'Do you love Uncle Aaron better than you do Uncle John? Didn't you tell me Uncle John was a dear good man? Ain't they both your brothers, just the same?"

'Indeed they are, and I love them both,' replied Aunt Lucy, quick tears dimming her kind eyes.

'But—but'—

The earnest eyes, the quivering lip, asked permission to go on. Aunt Lucy's genial smile granted it.

'You have made toast, and cooked chicken, and put on the prettiest dishes, for Uncle Aaron; but, when Uncle John was here the other day, you said, 'Never mind,—the blue dishes are just as well;' and you did not tell me to get the straight pickles either. But, auntie, I'm very sure you told me to treat my little playmates just alike.'

'Well, Minnie, I knew that Uncle Aaron was more particular about his eating than Uncle John. He is used to have things very nice at home, while Uncle John is not.'

'I know,' chimed in the flexible, expressive, childish voice,—I know why. It's because Uncle John is poor. But auntie, if he don't get nice things often, won't he like them better when he does?'

This naive, home, question, put with moist eyes and deprecating tone, was too much for Aunt Lucy. She would have boxed a pert child's ears, but (would that all of us could be as wise!) she answered Minnie humbly—

'Dear child, Aunt Lucy was wrong: she loves her brothers just alike, and means to treat them so; and, when Uncle John comes again, he shall have a nice supper.'

'Yes; and the straight pickles too.'

'I declare,' and the straight pickles too.'

'I declare,' said Aunt Lucy, shutting herself into the buttery, while the four years of experience outside walked away with a happy face,—'I declare, Lucinda, that child of yours does ask such questions! Did you hear her? I shall never see a crooked pickle again without feeling ashamed of myself. You must be careful; that pickle jar has taught Minnie more about the sin of respect to persons than the whole second chapter of James would have done.'

Heat and Exhaustion.

It requires a constitution and physique of unusual strength to resist the effect of the enervating heat of July and August. Unless the system is toned and sustained by a wholesome stomachic during these oppressive months it is likely to be so severely debilitated as to render it an easy prey to the epidemics which prevail in the fall. "A wholesome stomachic! where is it to be found?" asks the reader, who has, perhaps, been told by his physician that a little good brandy is a serviceable stimulant, and has sought for that obsolete article in vain. It would be as idle to expect wholesomeness and purity among the liquors of commerce as to look for miracles of piety in the State prison or wisdom in an idiot asylum.

There is one safe resource—but one—for those who need a protective tonic and health-sustaining invigorant. Let them commence at once, as the torrid season opens in all its intensity, a course of HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS. Ask the returned officers and soldiers of the Union army, who have used the elixir during the war what they think of it. They will tell you that it keeps up the vital forces under the wilting beams of a vertical sun without vitiating the blood or creating any undue excitement in the circulation. As the

THE REAL VELPAU FEMALE PILL.

[WARRANTED FRENCH.]

THESE PILLS, so celebrated many years ago in Paris for the relief of female irregularities, and afterward so notorious for their criminal employment in the practice of abortion, are now offered for sale for the first time in America. They have been kept in comparative obscurity from the fact that the originator, Dr. Velpau, is a physician in Paris of great wealth and strict conscientious principles, and has withheld them from general use, lest they should be employed for unlawful purposes. In overcoming Female Obstructions, Falling of the Womb, Whites, Green Sickness, Suppression, Retention, or Immoderate Flow of the Monthly Discharges, they seem to be truly omnipotent, bursting open the flood-gates from whatever cause may have stopped them; but they are offered to the public only for legitimate uses, and all agents are forbidden to sell them when it is understood that the object is unlawful. Married ladies should never take them when there is any reason to believe themselves pregnant, for they will be sure to produce a miscarriage.

These pills are entirely safe under all circumstances, being composed entirely of substances from the vegetable kingdom.

Each box has the coat of arms for the City of Paris stamped on the box, with the words "Trade Mark" in French, to counterfeit which is a misdemeanor, and all persons will be dealt with according to law.

Full directions accompany every box.

Ladies can obtain a box sealed from the eyes of the curious, by inclosing One Dollar and six post-office stamps to any respectable druggists, or to O. G. STAPLES, General Agent for the United States, Watertown, N. Y.

Wishard of Tecumseh, preached at Ridgeway on Sabbath the 24th of June in the afternoon, on occasion of the death of David McIntyre, who had been drowned the previous day at Tecumseh in the Mill pond, while bathing with others. Mr. McIntyre was aged about 24 years. He had resided in Ridgeway with his brother James the past six months and had so deported himself as to secure the confidence and friendship of those that knew him. He was a member of the Good Templars of Ridgeway, who attended on the occasion in full regalia, and performed their appropriate ceremonies.

Union School Exercises.

The exercises of the graduating class of the Union School took place in the Union Hall last Thursday afternoon and were well attended. We congratulate Prof. Thomas upon the success which has attended his efforts in introducing graduating exercises into the school, since we are satisfied that it must have a good effect.

It tends not only to give the school character and reputation abroad—but increasing the number of scholars in the higher classes and raises the standard of study. It encourages the students to persevere in their school duties, and complete the full course that they may receive a Diploma. We may reason and philosophize as we may, still every one whether old or young requires some incentive to action and this incentive is furnished to a student in no way so well as by a Diploma for faithful performance of his school duties. Already we begin to see the scholars in the lower classes making their arrangements to return and finish the course. They are talking and thinking more about the school than ever before. They have now something tangible to work for.

The graduating class this year number, nine; 7 young gentlemen and 2 young ladies—four graduating in the classical course and five in the English. The following are the names of the class:

Miss Fannie Sherman; Miss L. Annette Crossmon; Col. L. Saviers; C. A. Cook; E. C. Norcross; L. C. Miller; S. W. Anderson; A. D. Stacy; F. M. Bell.

They all performed their parts very creditably and when all did so well, it would be invidious to make any comparison.

Union School Alumni.

The literary exercises of the Alumni took place in Union School Hall last Friday afternoon. These annual meetings of the Alumni are becoming a very interesting feature of our school, and are becoming yearly more and more interesting. The exercises this year consisted of an oration and poem. The Orator for the occasion was Capt. David Boyd.—Subject,—Wealth, Material and Immaterial, or wealth as a product and a producing power. The object of the lecture was to show that money only or material wealth taken by itself alone was comparatively valueless, while intellectual culture and scholarly attainments if starved and pinched by poverty could not exercise their due influence in the world.—The true course to adopt is the golden mean,—to secure enough wealth to place one in affluent circumstance and devote the balance of our alloted time to the improvement of the mind. There were many fine thoughts in the oration which we would be glad to copy entire did not want of room prevent.

The poem was delivered by Miss L. Annette Crosmon, and was universally acknowledged to be a very fine production. It was entitled Recollections, and was a short and pleasing description of by-gone days. It was well received by the audience.

In the evening a public social was held in the Hall, and at ten o'clock the members of the Alumni adjourned to the National Hotel, and partook of the delicacies of the season. After the edibles had been disposed of the following toasts were offered and responded to.

1. The Union School.—Prof. Thomas.
2. The Alumni.—F. M. Bell.
3. Prof. Thomas,—The faithful friend, the accomplished scholar, the christian gentleman.—Col. L. Saviers.
4. Our Soldiers—May their success in the army be only excelled by their success at home.—Capt. D. Boyd.
5. The Old University.—S. C. Stacy.
6. The Ladies.—L. Cass Miller.
7. The Tecumseh String Band.—Responded to by the Band.

The exercises passed off very pleasantly throughout, nothing whatever occuring to mar the festivities of the occasion.

The String Band was present both afternoon and evening and added much to the interest of the exercises, and the Alumni owe a debt of thanks to the gentlemanly proprietors of the National for the excellent supper furnished them.

To Our Friends.

The Fourth of July.

Tecumseh witnessed the quietest 4th yesterday it has seen in many years.

A little powder was burned in the morning about day-break to usher in the day, and now and then a lonely fire cracker or torpedo was heard. Most of our own citizens had gone abroad to celebrate, and those who remained behind had no ambition to create any excitement. But notwithstanding the unusual quiet during the day the evening was celebrated in a manner worthy of the occasion.

Thirteen guns were let off at sunset in front of the public square, and as soon as night had drawn her sable curtain, a patriotic band of boys, about 50 in number, armed with tin horns, and oyster cans filled with stones and fire-crackers marched up and down Chicago street, at a double quick, shouting at the top of their voices for the glory of the Fourth. At this point the engagement became quite general. A magnificent sky-rocket was sent up from Alf. James' west window, which produced a thrill of joy thro' the vast crowd that lined the side walks. A moment after a whole bunch of fire-crackers was discharged under a tub in front of Conkling's. These were followed in quick succession by a Roman Candle from the parlor door of the National, a paper of torpedoes from Walters & Hialey's, two rockets and three pin wheels from the bran new hitching posts in front of Fisher & Baker's Drug Store and some colored lights and 'sarpints' from Sanford's Egg Manufactory,—the whole being intermingled with an incessant roar of fire cracker infantry.

The skirmish line extended up Chicago street for some distance. The remains of several crackers were found the next morning in the street near G. T. Ketcham's, while scouts report the discharge of a roman candle at Wescott's corner, and at the extreme left of the line in front of Judge Stacy's a fine rocket is said to have gone up a few moments before the general engagement at the corner of Chicago and Railroad streets began. The exercises closed with a huge bon fire built under the protecting wing of the town pump. Take it all in all there was probably never such a scene witnessed within the memory of the oldest inhabitant.

Mail Robbery.

Last week Thursday, a Boy named David Gillett, who carries the mail on Tecumseh and Jonesville route was arrested for robbery and taken to Detroit. Letters were discovered scattered along the road, which gave rise to suspicion against him and led to his arrest.

He was brought before the U. S. District Court on Monday last and plead guilty, but sentence was suspended until next November. The boy is said to be a fine penman and a very fair scholar, and should have known better, but at the same time it is thought that he did not realize the enormity of the act, or at least did not appreciate the consequences.

WHO IS TO BLAME!—If people grow thin and emaciated, and fairly die out by inches from the ravages of dyspepsia and indigestion, and who will pity such people, in their distress and suffering, when they neglect to avail themselves of the only remedy yet discovered that will cure them, and which we have again and again repeated and recommended as a certain cure for dyspepsia—we refer to Co's Dyspepsia Cure. It is certainly the greatest miracle of the age, for it cures all disorders of the stomach and bowels.

☞ We would call the attention of our readers to the advertisement in today's issue of Messrs. Thayer, Noyes & Co's. grand combination Circus which is to exhibit in this city, on Monday, July 9th, and will afford the admirers of superb equestrians, and athletic skill and skillful and artistic performances, rare chance to gratify their tastes, as we are assured their performers are the elite of their profession.

☞ It is a bad thing to make up a light, but a good thing to make up a quarrel; but it is better to fight than to have your Grocer palm off any other Saleratus on to you then Herrick Allen's Gold Medal, manufactured at 112 Liberty Street, New York. We are glad to see hat a good many of our Merchants are selling it, notwithstanding they can't make so good a profit on it as on other kinds. If any one wants to get up a fight with us, let them try and put some other kind of Saleratus or Soda on to us besides Herick Allen's Gold Medal.

THE REALMS OF LONG AGO.

The day, with its sandals dipped in dew,
Has passed through the evening's golden gates,
And a single star in the cloudless blue
For the rising moon in silence waits;
While the winds that sigh to the languid hours
A lullaby breathe o'er the folded flowers.

The lillies nod to the sound of the stream
That winds along with a lulling flow,
And either awake or half in a dream,
I pass through the realms of Long Ago,
While faces peer with many a smile
From the bowers of Memory's magical isle.

There are joys and sunshine, sorrows and tears,
That check the path of life's April hours,
And a longing wish for the coming years
That hope ever wreathes with the fairest flowers;
There are friendships guileless—love as bright
And pure as the stars in the halls of night.

There are ashen memories, bitter pain,
And buried hopes and a broken vow,
And an aching heart by the restless main,
And the sea-breeze fanning a pallid brow,
And a wanderer on the shell lined shore
Listening for voices that speak no more.

There are passions strong and ambitious wild,
And the fierce desire to stand in the van
Of the battle of life—and the heart of the child
Is crushed in the breast of the struggling man;
But short the regrets and few are the tears,
That fell at the tomb of the vanished years.

There's a quiet; and peace, and domestic love,
And joys arising from faith and truth,
And a love unquestioned, far above
The passionate dreamings of ardent youth;
And kisses of children on lip and cheek,
And the parent's bliss which no tongue can speak.

There are loved ones lost! There are little graves
In the distant dell, 'neath protecting trees,
Where the str amlet winds and the violet waves,
And the grasses sway to the sighing breeze;
And we mourn for the pressure of tender lips,
And the light of eyes darkened in earth's eclipse.

And thus, as the glow of the daylight flies,
And the night's first look to the earth is cast,
I gaze 'neath those beautiful summer skies,
As the pictures that hang on the hall of the past;
Oh, sorrow and joy chaunt a mingled lay
When to memory's wildwood we wander away.

Marriage of Johnny Beedle.

I was spunking up to Sally Jones like all vengeance, and threatening to give her the butt end of my sentiments. Well, I was as good as my word. The next Sabberday I went right to work, after meeting, upon the outer man, as Deacon Carpenter says, and by sundown things looked about right. I said nothing; but when I stood up to the glass, to finish, and sort of titivate the hair and whiskers, and so forth, I saw a little feller there that looked wicked. And, says I, if Sally Jones knows which side her bread is buttered——But no matter, she shan't say I didn't give her a chance.

Well, I went over to the Squires pretty well satisfied in my mind; so, after fluttering and crowing about her a little while, I up and showed the cloven foot.

"Sally," said I, "will you take me for better or worser?"

This put her to considering; and I gave a flourish about the room, and cut a curlycue with my right foot, as much as to say—take your time.

At last says she: "I'd as liv's have you as anybody in the world, John, but—I declare—I can't."

"You can't, ha? and why?"

"Cause."

"Cause what?"

"Cause I can't—and that's enough. I would in a minute, John, but for only one reason, and that I'm afraid to tell ye."

"Poh, poh," says I, "don't be bashful; if there's only one stump in the way, I guess here's a feller——"

"The reason is—Joe Bowers, the stage driver. Now, you shan't tell nobody, John, will ye?"

It seemed to me the very old boy had got into the women. They fairly put me to the nonplush. All this time my popularity with the ladies was amazing. To see them flattering and soft-soaping me all over, you would have sworn that I had nothing to do but to pick and choose. I had as much gallanting to do as I wanted everywhere; and for politeness and gentility, I never turned my back to no man. Then, they were so thick and familiar with me that they didn't care what they said or did before me; and finally, whenever they had any errands or chores to do, who but I was the favorite bird to fetch and carry? I was forever and ever acting and cantering from post to pillar, to do their biddings. Rain or shine, snow or mud, nothing stopped me; and I may say I fairly earned their smiles by the sweat of my brow. Then it was: "Oh, Mr. Beedle! What should we do without Mr. Beedle?" But when I caught one alone, and began to touch on matrimonial sentiments, then how quick the tune was changed! Oh, the ways of the women are curious!

Well, as I was going moping along home from Squire Jones', I fell in with Docter Dingley. The docter saw in a minute that something was the matter, and he went to work and pumped the whole secret out of me. Then he seemed so friendly that I up and told him all my experience from beginning to end.

"Well, John," says he, "I advise you to wait until the twenty-ninth of February, when the gals turn round to court the fellers. It's none of my business, but if I was you I wouldn't let the women folks make a fool of me any more."

Well, I took a resolution, and stuck to it firm. I stuck to it till along pretty well in January, when I had to go to singing school. But that was nothing, if it hadn't fell to my lot to go home with Hannah Peabody four times runnin. Politeness be.ore everything. Well, she kept growing prettier and prettier every time, but I only grit my teeth and held on the harder.

By-and-by Sabbath night came round, and I felt sort of uneasy moping about home; and says I this resolution will never set well upon my stomach without air and exercise; and before I was done thinking of this I was more than half way to Captain Peabody's. It was about daylight down as I was passing by the kitchen; but hearing a sort of snikering, I slipped up and peeped into the window, just out of curiosity.

There was no candle burning—for Mrs. Peabody is saving of tallow—but I could see Hannah and Poll Patridge, the help, telling fortunes in the ashes, by fire-light. I turned round to go off, and right against Jack Robinson. Jack was come to set up with the help, and would insist upon it, I should go in and see Hannah.

"She hasn't had a spark this month," says he, "and in you shall go, or I'll lick ye."

Well, there is no dodging here, and all I had to do was to grin and bear it. So in I went, and once in, good-by to resolution. The short and the long of it is I was soon as deep in the mud as I had been in the mire.

But I rather guess I had cut my eye teeth by this time. If I hadn't learned something about the nature of women the kicks I had taken from all quarters fell on barren ground. There is no way of dealing with them but to coax and flatter, you gain nothing, let me tell you, by a saving of soft soap; and you must be sly about it. It is no way to catch a wicked devil of a colt, in a pasture, to march right up, bridle in hand; you must sort of sidle along as if you was going past, and whistle, and pretend to be looking t'other way; and so round and round, till at last you corner him up; then jump and clinch him by the forelocks Oh, I'm not so great a fool as I might be.

But it was a long and tedious business before Hannah and I could come to any sort of an understanding. There was old Captain Peabody was a stump in the way. He was a man who had no politeness; he traveled rough-shod through the town, carrying a high head and a stiff upper lip, as much as to say: "I owes nobody nothing." He had been a skipper, and sailed his schooner all along shore, till he got forehanded, then went back up country and set down farming.

Well, as I was afraid to go to the house and court Hannah in the regular way, I had to carry on the war just when and where I could; sometimes of a dark night I could steal into the kitchen. But my safest plan was to track her to the neighbors' houses where she went to spend evenings, skulk about till she started home, and then waylay her on the road. Pretty poor chance this, you'll say. But as if this wasn't enough, Hannah herself must join in to plague me half to death.

Ye see, I wanted to let her know what I was arter in a sort of a delicate, underhand way, and keep myself on the safe side of the fence all the time if there was to be any kicking. But Hannah had no notion of riddles; she would not understand anything short of plain English. I hinted plaguey suspicious about "true love" and "Cupid's darts," and all that. Then I would heav a long sigh and say, "What does that mean, Hannah?" But no; she couldn't see, poor soul; she looked as simple and innocent all the while as if butter wouldn't melt in her mouth.

One evening she was going to her Aunt Molly's to spend the evening, and she went all the way round to Doctor Dingley's to tell Mrs Dingley not to tell me, "for," says she, "I don't want him to be dogging me about everywhere." Well, Mrs. Dingley promised to keep dark, but she told the doctor, and what does the doctor do but comes right over and tells me. "Gone all stark alone, says he; "but its none of my business."

This is the day that I have marked with a piece of chalk. Hardly was daylight down before I was snug in my skulking nest in Aunt Molly's barn. It was on the haymow, where there was a knot hole handy, to look through and see all that went in or out of the house. I had a scheme in my head that Hannah little dreamt of, and I lay and thought it over till she came out; and when I got her under my arm, and walking down the lane, thinks I, I'll set the stone a-rolling anyhow, let it stop where it will.

So I set in to talking about this and that and t'other thing, and happened (by mere chance, ye know) to mention our hatter's shop, that stands at the corner, my father used to work in when he was alive. And says I, "Speaking of the old shop, it always puts me in mind of you, Hannah."

"Of me, John?" says she. "Well?"

"Oh, its just the thing for a store," says I.

"Well—"

"Sweep out the dirt, and the old hat parings, and the truck—"

"Well—"

"Take the sign and rub out 'hatter,' and put in its place 'merchant,' and you see that spells 'John Beedle, merchant.'"

"Well, John—"

"Then get rum, and molasses, and salt fish, and ribbons, and calicoes—"

"Oh," says she, "it's my new calico gown you was thinking of—isn't it pretty?"

"Oh." says I, "'tis a sweet, pretty gownd," says I, "but—the upshot of the matter is, Hannah—I have finally concluded to set up store and get married, and settle myself down as a merchant for life."

At this Hannah hung down her head, and gave a snicker.

"And how does that put you in mind of me, John?" says she.

"Guess."

What I said and what she said next, is all lost, for I'll treat if I can remember. It is all buz, buz in my head, like a dream. The first thing I knew, we were right against Captain Peabody's barn, walking, and our arms round each other's waists. Hannah's tongue had got thawed out, and was running like a brook in a freshet, and all one steady stream of honey. I vow, I was ready to jump out of my skin.

It was a mile and a half, good, from Aunt Molly's to Captain Peabody's, and I thought we had been about a minute on the road. So says I,

"Hannah, let's go set down under the great apple tree, and have a little chat, just to taper off the evening."

We now sat down and began to talk sensible. We settled all the predicaments of the nuptial ceremony, and then talked over the store, till we thought we saw ourselves behind the counter; I weighing and measuring, and dickering and dealing out, and she at the desk, pen in hand, figuring up the accounts.

But just as we were beginning to get sociable, as I thought, Hannah looks up, and says she—

"What can that air great red streak be, in the sky, away down there beyond Saccarap?"

"I rather guess," says I, "it is fire in the woods."

"Fire in the woods! I'll be skinned if it isn't daylight a-comin. Quick, John, help me into the window, before father is a stirring, or here'll be a pretty how d'ye do."

The next job was to tell the news to Captain Peabody. Hannah had settled it that she would speak to her mother, and said she could manage her well enough, and it was my business to ask her father. This was a thing easier said than done. I tried to persuade Hannah to marry first, and ask afterward. Says I, "You are twenty-one, and free, according to law." But she wouldn't hear of it. She had no notion of doing anything clandestinely. Then I asked Dr. Dingley to go and break the ice for me. But no; he would not meddle with other folks' business—he made it a pint.

Well, says I, if I have got to come to the scratch, the less I consider on it the better. So, one stormy day, I put my head down against a northeaster, and set my feet a-going, and the next thing I was standing right afore Captain Peabody. He was in his grain house shelling corn—sitting on a tub, with a frying-pan stuck through the handles. And he made the cobs fly every which way, hit or miss, he didn't care. But it tickled him so to see me dodge 'em, that he got into uncommon good humor.

"Well, Johnny Beedle, who has brought you up here, right in the wind's eye, this morning?"

"Why, Cap'n, I've got an idea in my head."

"No! how you talk!"

"Ye see, the upshot of the matter is, I've a notion of settin up store, and gittin a wife, and settlin' myself down as a merchant."

"Whoorah, John—this is two ideas!—a store and a wife."

"But I want a little of your help," says I.

"Well, John," says he, "I'll do the handsome thing by ye. If you keep better goods than anybody else, and sell cheaper, you shall have my custom, and welcome—provided you'll take pay in sauce and things. Isn't that fair?"

"Oh yes, Cap'n."

"And I wish you success on the other track. No fear of that, I'll warrant. There's lot of silly gals afloat, and such a fine taut rigged gentleman as you are can run one down in no time."

"Oh yes, Cap'n; I've run down Hannah already."

"My Hannah?"

"Oh yes, Cap'n; we've agreed, and only want your consent."

With this the old Cap'n riz right up on end, upset the tub and frying-pan, and pointed, with a great red ear of corn in his hand, towards the door without saying a word. But his eyes rolled like all creation.

This raised my blood, and I felt so stuffy that I marched right straight off, and never turned my head to the right or left till I was fairly home and housed.

Well, now, says I, my apple cart is upset in good earnest. And when I went to Dr. Dingley for comforts, he says:

'John, I wash my hands of this whole affair, from beginning to end. I must support my character. I am a settled doctor in the town—and the character of a doctor, John, is too delicate a flower to go poking around and dabbling in everybody's mess. Mrs. Dingley, I warn you not to meddle nor make in this business."

"Hold your tongue, you fool you," says she, "did you ever hear of me burning my fingers?"

Howsumever, there was underhand work carried on somewhere and by somebody. I don't tell tales out of school. I had no hand in it, but one day Doctor Dingley, says he—

"John, if you happen to be wanting my horse and shay, this afternoon, about three o'clock, go and take it. I never refuse to lend, you know. And I hope that Captain Peabody will gain his law suit with Deacon Carpenter, that he has gone down to Portland to see to. But that's none of my business."

Somebody, too—I don't say who—told me there was a certain Squire Darling, living in a certain town, about ten miles off, that did business and asked no questions. Well, in this said town, just after sundown, a young man named Joseph Morey, was walking near the meeting house, with a sort of a cream colored book under his arm, and heard something in the woods this side, that if it wasn't a harrycane, he'd give up guessing Such a cracking and squeaking and rattling—such a thrashing and grunting and snorting you never! He stopped and looked back, and all soon came to light. There was an old white-faced horse come scambling along out of the woods, recking and foaming, with an old wooded top shay at his tail, and a chap about my size flourishing a small bean pole pretty well broomed up at the end. And say—

"Mister, can ye tell me where one Squire Darling lives?"

"Which Squire Darling?" says he; there's two of that name."

"His name is John," says I.

"Faith," says he, "they are both Johns, too, but one is a lawyer and the t'other a cooper."

"Oh, then, it must be the lawyer I want."

With this the young man gave a squint at Hannah and a wink at me, and, says he "Come along; I am going right there now, and I'll show ye the squire and fix things for ye"

Well, he carried us into a small one story house, a little further on, full of books and papers and dust, and smelling strong of old dead tobacco smoke. Here we sat down while he went about our business We waited and waited till long after dark, and were glad enough to see him come at last with a candle.

"The squire is very sick," says he, "but I have over-persuaded him."

The next moment the squire came grunting along in, all muffled up in a great coat, and spectacles on, and a great tall woman with him to witness for the bride.

Well, he went to work and married us, and followed up with a right down sensible sermon, and I never felt so solemn and serious. Then followed kissing the bride all round; then the certificates, and then I gave two silver dollars, and we got into the shay again and drove off.

After this nothing happened to speak of, for about a month. Everything was kept snug, and Captain Peabody had no suspicions. But one morning, at break of day, as I was creeping softly down Captain Peabody's back stairs, with my shoes in my hand, I trod into a tub of water which was standing on the third step from the bottom, and down I came slam bang. The captain was going to kill his hogs, and had got up betimes, put his water to heat, and was whetting his butcher knife in the kitchen.

The first thing I saw, when I looked up, there stood Captain Peabody with a great butcher knife in hand, looking down upon me like thunder! I want to know if I didn't feel streaked! He clinched me by the collar and stood me up, and then raised his knife over me as high as he could reach. I thought my time had come. Blood would have been shed as sure as rats, if it had not been for Mrs. Peabody. She stepped up behind him and laid hold of his arm; and says she, "it's no matter Mr. Peabody, they are married."

"Married to that puppy!" roared the captain.

"Yes, sir," says I, "and here's the certificate." And I pulled it out of my jacket pocket, and gave it to him. But I didn't stay for any more ceremony; as soon as I felt his grip loosen a little, I laid off like an eel, and backed out doors, and made tracks home about as fast as my legs could carry me. But there was to be no peace for me this day. I was in constant worry and stew all the forenoon, for fear the captain would do something rash, and I could neither sit, nor stand still, eat, drink, nor think.

About the middle of the afternoon Doctor Dingley came bouncing in, out of breath, and says he,

"John, you have been cheated and bamboozled! Your marriage ain't worth that. It was all a contrivance of Jack Darling, the lawyer, and his two imps, Joe Morey, and Peter Scamp."

This was all he could say till he wiped his face, and had taken a swig of cider to recover his breath, and then he gave me the particulars.

When Captain Peabody had read my certificate he could not rest; but tackled up and drove right down to let off his fury upon his old friend, Squire Darling. The moment he got sight of the squire he turned to and called him all the loud names he could lay his tongue to for half an hour. The captain downed the certificates, and says he,

The squire knew the handwriting was his nephews" as soon as he saw it, and the truth was brought to light. But as the storm fell in one quarter it rose from t'other. Squire Darling had smelt tar in his day, and hadn't forgot how to box the compass; and as soon as the saddle was on the right hoss, he set in and gave the captain his own again; and let him have it about nor-nor-west, right in his teeth till he was fairly blown out. They shook hands then and seeing Hannah and I had got under weight together, they said we must go to the village. So the squire slicked up a little, got into the shay, and came home with the captain, to hold the wedding that very night.

How Doctor Dingley happened to be in town just in the nick of time I don't know. It was his luck; and as so n as he saw the way the wind was, he kicked up and cantered home in a hurry. After he had got through with the particulars, says he,

"Now, Mr. Beedle it's none of my business, but if I had such a hitch upon Captain Peabody, I would hang back like a stone drag, till he agreed to back my note for two hundred dollars in the Portland bank, to buy goods with, enough to set you up in a store."

I thought strong on this idea as I was going over to Captain Peabody's; but the moment I showed the least symptoms of backing, such a storm was raised as was never seen. Father and mother-in-law and Squire Darling set up sich a yell all together, and poor Hannah, she sat down and cried. My heart failed me, and I made haste to give in and plead sorry as quick as possible; and somehow in the hurry, let on that Doctor Dingley had led me on; and so was the innocent cause of his getting a most righteous licking the first time Captain Peabody caught him. It was not settled short of thirty dollars.

Well, Squire Darling stood up and married us, and there was the end of trouble. Mother-in-law would not part with Hannah, and she made father-in-law give us a setting out, in the north end of the house. He could not stomach me very well for a while, but I have managed to get on the blind side of him. I turned right in to work on his farm as steady and industrious as a cart-house; and I kept on pleasing him in one way and another more and more, till he had taken such a liking to me, that he wouldn't part with me for a cow.

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK.

General Intelligence.

The Atlantic cable is finished, and the Great Eastern was announced to start on the 30th of June.

On the 5th of March, there was a terrific explosion of nitro-glycerine at Sidney, Australia, in the business part of the city.

Stephens, the Fenian organizer, will soon make a tour of the West. He will be in Cincinnati about the middle of next week.

It is rumored that First Assistant Postmaster General Randall will, in a short time succeed Secretary Harlan in the Interior department.

A mail arrived in New York on the 25th, bringing New Orleans papers of the 20th, only four days and a half from that city—the quickest time on record.

On the 25th, Detroit and Buffalo were both heavily visited by tornadoes, and on the 26th, a large hotel at Oil Springs, C. W., was blown down, and other injury done.

It is seriously doubted by surgeons if there be any such thing as Asiatic cholera on these shores. The cases heretofore classed as such are of the usual character, brought on by impurity or intemperance.

In the Canadian Parliament, on Friday, a motion was made and carried to demand of the United States indemnity for the expenses incurred during the late Fenian troubles. A Mr. Chambers opposed the motion, but was hissed down.

Thomas DArcy McGee refuses to employ his influence to save the Fenian prisoners in Canada from their fate, on the ground that their enterprise "was murder, not war; they must therefore take the consequences of their own acts."

A National Convention of the Johnson party is called at Philadelphia on the 14th of August. A. W. Randall, First Assistant Postmaster General, heads the call, and Senators Doolittle and Cowan are among the signers.

Dates from Europe to the 17th inst. announce that Prussia has commenced actual war by sending troops to Saxony, and it is believed that Benedek would immediately attack the Prussians. Great commotion and financial depression existed throughout Germany.

About 12,000 Fenians assembled outside of Jones' Wood on the 24th, and listened to a long speech from the Chief Organizer, James Stephens. The greeting he received was very enthusiastic, and his remarks were listened to with considerable attention. He concluded with the assurance that before the close of the present year, the Sunburst should be unfurled in Ireland.

In a tunnel twenty miles from London, on the Great Northern Railway, three merchandise trains collided, took fire from their engines, and burned up. The employees escaped with slight injuries, save one poor fellow who perished. There was a great deal of oil among the freight. The repeated explosions rendered any attempt, even if the heat and smoke had not prevented it, to enter the tunnel abortive. From the air shaft and smoke, at intervals, flame, although some fifty or sixty feet in height from the roadway to the summit of the shaft, together with sounds resembling the roaring of a mighty cataract or river, indicated the character of the conflagration that was running underneath. It was deemed advisable to let it expend itself. The fire continued to rage throughout the whole of the day and night, and it was not until six o'clock P. M. that it had become sufficiently reduced to enable any one to enter the tunnel.

The Postmaster General sends a communication to Congress calling attention to abuses of the franking privilege in the use of franks of members by claim agents, patent agents, etc. The Postmaster-General says this abuse has become a serious evil, and is lessening considerably the postal revenues, and bringing reproach upon the department. The Postmaster-General is powerless to arrest this evil while members of Congress permit their clerks or other persons to write their names upon envelopes, and use or permit the use of fac simile stamps neither of which has the sanction of law. Cases are cited where a Senator intrusts all his franking to a niece; where patent agents send their circulars under frank of a member of Congress, and a case where a clerk in one of the departments farms out the franks of three several members of Congress. Outside of this report we hear of an instance where it is charged that a member of Congress sells his frank.

Southern News.

Two men were stabbed at Galveston on the 27th, while asleep in bed at a hotel. Their watches and money were taken.

In the interior of Texas, the other day, a child was devoured by alligators, near a river which was full of the reptiles.

The Catawissa railroad case has been settled. The consolidation of the Atlantic and Great Western Railroad is valid and lawful.

An investigation into the Southern cotton frauds is to be had in the House. They are estimated at a $100,000,000, exclusive of an immense amount of other stealings.

The freedmen are behaving badly in the Sumter District of South Carolina. A detachment of regulars had been sent from Columbia to preserve order.

Major Gee, formerly of the Salisbury (N. C.) prison pen, has been pronounced "not guilty" of cruel treatment of Union prisoners, and will probably soon be set at liberty.

A prize fight took place at Louisville on the 29th, betwen two well-known pugilists. After fighting 15 rounds one had an eye punched out, and was otherwise seriously injured.

Rents in Shreveport, La., are terribly exorbitant. A family cannot rent a dwelling which even pretends to respectability for less than $75 or $100 per month, and they are nothing but small cottage houses at that.

A gigantic cotton factory, called the "Manassas" manufactory, has been built at Carrolton, Miss. It contains 180,000 spindles, 1800 looms, and goes into operation on the first of July. The stock now stands fifteen per cent. above par.

Sympathy for the fallen military leader of the Confederacy is taking the shape of a new New Orleans steamer, the Robert E. Lee, now being built at New Albany, Ind., by Captain John Cannon, which will far exceed in style, costliness and speed, anything that has ever ruffled the broad bosom of the Mississippi. Her sealed contracts amount to the enormous sum of $240,000. Her machinery alone will cost $60,000. Her carpet has already been contracted for through a New York merchant, to be made in Europe, of one whole piece, not a seam in it. It will cost $15,000.

The clerk stepped to the counter and addressed the package as desired. While the clerk was thus engaged, one of the men walked around behind the clerk, and picked up a money package containing $4,457, that was lying with others on the desk, put it in his pocket and deliberately walked out of the office, and disappeared in the crowd on the street. The cashier, who happened to be near by, witnessed the whole operation, but instead of giving the alarm at once, rushed to the other end of the office for his pistol, and when he returned to arrest the robbers and make them disgorge, they were gone. The police were immediately notified of the robbery, but as yet no arrests have been made.

One of the most serious shipwrecks that has been known for years on our Western lakes occurred on Monday, the 18th inst., in the destruction of the bark James P. King, of Lockport, off Port Rowan, Lake Erie. Out of fourteen souls on board, only one survived, and he in a very feeble condition. He states that when the vessel capsized, some persons were washed overboard, and the rest secured themselves. After she struck the beach, the fore and mainmasts fell, but the mizzen was left standing, and as the sea was breaking on her in huge waves every moment, this was the only secure place. The survivor managed to secure a place of safety in the cross-trees. The rest were not so fortunate, as they were unable to get higher than the futtock shrouds from fatigue. During the night they one after another had to lose their holds and fell overboard. The Captain, whose name was Edward Quinn, was one of the last to drop, and the survivor, whose name is Thomas McGinnis, thinks he was knocked off by one of the others falling upon him, as he had been cheering the men as best he could, and trying to keep their courage up till daylight. The men were all married but one, and the mate had his wife and child on board with him.

Capt. Scott's Dog.

The celebrated Martin Scott was a friend of General Marcy, who in his new book, "Thirty Years of army Life," gives many interesting anecdotes about him:

Captain Scott was at one time, while stationed at Prairie du Chien, in possession of a wonderfully sagacious dog, a cross of the setter and pointer.

The Captain would, for example, while sitting in his quarters at the fort, with the dog at his feet, say "Mark, I want you to go over to the island and ascertain if there are any woodcock there, and come back and tell me." The dog would instantly go to the river, swim to the island, and, if he had found birds, run up to his master, then to the gun, wag his tail, and make other demonstrations of joy, which made it perfectly apparent that he had been successful. Scott would then tell the dog to get the canoe in readiness, and strange as it may appear, he would take the cushion in his mouth, carry it to the river bank where the boat was moored, place it upon the seat, return for the paddle, carry that to the canoe, then go back to Scott, and look up in his face with an expression which indicated that all was ready.

The Captain had at this same time another dog, which he called Turk. These dogs, from their first acquaintance, had never been on friendly terms, and they had many severely contested encounters, which finally resulted in Turk's gaining and retaining the mastery. Mark was emphatically a vanquished dog, and, by his meek and submissive demeanor in the presence of his adversary, admitted as much.

Upon one occasion, Turk had gained possession of a bonne bouche, in the form of a beef's bone, which he was quietly enjoying by himself upon the parade ground, when Mark chanced to pass that way, and scented the choice morsel. The longing, anxious look which he cast toward the bone, as he circled around at a respectable distance, told how desirous he was to participate in the feast; but his experience had taught him that an attempt to contend with his powerful adversary would only result in his own discomfiture. He therefore prudently resolved to resort to strategy in order to accomplish his ends. Accordingly, he ran furiously outside the stockade inclosure and set up a tremendous barking, as if something very extraordinary had occurred; upon which, as usual, all the dogs in the fort hurried out of the gates to see what was the matter, and among them was Turk, who, in the excitement of the moment, abandoned his bone. As soon as this was done, Mark very quietly slipped back; seized the prize, and carried it to a hiding place, where he could enjoy it at his leisure

Mark was by no means a dog of regular habits, and would often steal away from home and pass the night among his canine companions of the opposite sex. For this he was invariably punished, his master compelling him to stand on his hind feet, with his fore paws resting against the wall, while the castigation was administered by a cowhide. In one instance, after having absented himself all night, he returned home with a most dejected and penitent air, and, seeing his master looking very angry at him, he immediately went to the wall, placed himself in the position he had been required to assume when he received his previous punishments, and, at the same time, turned his head around and looked at Scott, as much as to say, "I am ready."

In the course of time Mark waxed in years, and was no longer able to endure the work required in hunting, and Capt. Scott took him home to Bennington to pass the remainder of his days in quiet retirement, and here he continued to make himself useful even in his dotage by going to the pasture every night and driving home the cows. It certainly appeared as if this animal was endowed with something beyond mere brute instinct, as he seemed to comprehend all the relations existing between cause and effect.

Captain Scott was so very fond of his dogs, that I have known him, upon the death of a favorite one, to walk his room in great apparent distress of mind during the entire night, and afterward place the body in a coffin, and, with his boy Jack leading his hunting horse draped in black, follow it to the grave, and bury it with as much care and ceremony as if it had been a child.

Domestic Paragraphs.

—A. T. Stewart has purchased Kellogg's "Princess after the Bath," said to be a marvel of coloring, for the nice little sum of $25,000.

A son of Morris Rockwell, only two years old, fell out of a swing at Fort Wayne and caught by his neck in such a manner as to choke to death ere assistance could reach him.

—Two young girls in Memphis tried to frighten a companion by holding her on the railroad track as a train was approaching. The fright didn't kill her, but the engine did.

—A little girl in Bethlehem, Connecticut, chewed off the ends of her finger nails and swallowed them, but they stuck in her stomach, ulcerated it, and killed her. Moral: don't bite your finger nails.

—There is a serious stagnation in the steam coasting trade of New York, and many splendid and thoroughly appointed steamers are idle at the docks of various ports from Baltimore to Portland, —In New Bedford, Mass., recently, a four-year old girl was reproved by a domestic, when the child went and shut herself up in a spring lock trunk, like Genevra in the old story, and was nearly dead when found.

—The wife of Captain Vessels, living in Accomac county, Virginia, gave birth one day this week to two children, each having two heads, four eyes, and three legs. This rather surpasses anything of such a nature that has come to our knowledge.

—The new Odd Fellows' building to be erected on the corner of Sixth and Vine streets, Cincinnati, is said to exceed in grandeur any similar building in the United States, and will cost half a million dollars. Twenty lodges and encampments will hold their meetings in it.

—In consequence of the "increased cost of materials used," the New York dentists have advanced their charges. Before the war a man might be dragged three times around the room, have his jaw broken and a double tooth extracted for the low charge of twenty-five cents. The luxury is now no longer within the reach of moderate means.

—The Iron Works of McKay & Aldus, in East Boston, can certainly claim amongst its employees two of the strongest men in the country. One of them picked up a piece of iron weighing 800 pounds, in the ordinary course of his work, while another raised another piece, weighing 600 pounds, as high as his head. These feats were not executed as tests of strength.

—The oldest house in the United States now standing as it was originally built, is the Rev. Dr Whitefield's at Guilford, Conn. It was built in 1639; the walls are of stone and the wood-work is of oak. The diamond shaped windows were removed some sixty or seventy years ago, but in other respects the venerable mansion remains in its original state.

—The Cleveland Leader reveals the lamentable adventure of a confiding Illinois merchant on his way to New York, who fell in with a lady on the Lake Shore Road who inaugurated herself into his affections until they became very confidential, got possession of his baggage checks, "just to take care of them, you know," left him at Buffalo, and ordered the baggage sent after her by the next train to Rochester. The last seen of the merchant he was excitedly following his trunks to Rochester.

—Miss Mary G. Halpine, of Nashua, New Hampshire, a contributor to several literary works had an adventure with a burglar a few evenings since. Only herself and mother were in the house, and it was raining in torrents. She watched the operations of the burglar while he removed a pane of glass and introduced his hand to raise the window, and then, thinking that the affair had been carried far enough, she discharged a revolver twice, dropping him to the ground. A policeman hastened to the spot, but the burglar had escaped leaving a pool of blood under the window.

—A Presbyterian clergyman named Lindsley, residing about a mile south of Medina, New York, whipped his child, a boy three years old, so severely that he died three hours afterward,—all, forsooth, because the poor little martyr could not, or would not, say his prayers. The body of the child told more plainly and pathetically than words could, of the terrible punishment it had undergone. Several of its fingers were broken, and the blood had oozed from every pore. To conceal the crime, the father tied the little one's hands behind its back and placed it in its coffin.

—A few days ago, a boy in Appanoose county, Iowa, killed a snake that measured sixteen feet and two inches in length, and one foot and eight inches around the body. He came upon the snake about noon, and thinking perhaps that it would be wise to look for a more healthful locality, took a bee line towards home. Snake pursued. Boy ran awhile, got mad, and determined to stop and fight it out on that line. The snake was not prepared for this show of courage—faced about and began to retreat. Boy now pursued, and hit the enemy a blow across the back. Snake turned upon the boy again and was killed by a blow on the head.

—Chas. T. Chamblin of Leesburg, Va., coughed from his throat, a few days since, a minie ball that had been lodged there for more than four years. He was shot at Seven Pines, June 1st, 1862, the ball entering the side of the nose just below the left eye. It was probed four inches, and found to have passed nearly perpendicularly in, scarcely missing the brain. It disabled him for duty, and has ever since caused much pain in damp weather, frequently rendering it almost impossible to swallow at all. When coughed up it seemed to have come from just below the right ear, under the jaw bone, causing but little pain, and was followed by no blood.

Foreign Gossip.

—A new paper has appeared in Paris under the name of the Creditor's Moniteur, in which will be inscribed the names of all persons, no matter what station, convicted of being what tradesmen call "bad pay."

—A couple of enterprising photographers of Warsaw have been fined one hundred dollars each, for producing portraits of young Komissaroff, the person who saved the Emperor's life, the shadow of which depicted an ass.

—Last April there were sixty five attempts at suicide in Vienna. Forty seven were by men, fifteen by women, and three by children from nine to fourteen years of age. Twenty-two persons hanged themselves, fifteen drowned themselves, eleven took poison, five cut their throats, two shot themselves, and seven died of self-inflicted stabs.

—A singular case has just come before the French tribunals. A young girl eleven years of age attempted successively the life of her mother and sister for the sole purpose of drinking their blood. The child has been examined by competent physicians, and proved to be attacked with the strange mania of anthropophagy. Her extreme youth leads the physicians to the hope that her cure may be accomplished.

—A young secretary of the Turkish embassy is accredited with the following pieuvre: He was asked, while in the company of the representatives of Parisian beauty, to whom he thought the viceroy of Egypt, on his visit to the great exhibition, would bestow his handerchief. "I am sure I cannot say," replied the embryo ambassador, "for the viceroy never uses a handkerchief"—an enlightenment as to manners in the east which is a little surprising.

—Dumas once wrote a play having a hundred and twenty characters. It had to be cut down one-half before it could be brought inside the French limit of six hours acting time. The success of the play was only moderate.

—Pin-ta-jing and his fellow Chinese diplomatists are the present sensation in Paris. Everything they see is inferior to what they have in China. One of their attendants at the theatre was apologizing for the small size of their box. "We have them much smaller with us," they replied.

—The London Daily News states that an important change in the Mohammedan law of succession to sovereign power of late has been sanctioned by the greatest Mussulman authorities. The Viceroy of Egypt demands and the Sultan consents, that the eldest son of the Viceroy shall be considered the legitimate heir to the Pachalic, instead of the eldest prince of the reigning family. Hitherto the Pacha's brother, Mustapha, has been considered by himself and others the heir presumptive.

—The Abbe Paradis, 63 years of age, principal chaplain at Bicetre, was walking in Rue Vandamme, Paris, on the morning of the 28th of May, when he was accosted by a gentleman who asked him the hour. He replied "half-past eleven, the hour of my death; never mind; I am ready, sustain me?" And before the latter request could be complied with, he grew pale, tottered, and fell to the pavement. Medical assistance was instantly procured, but he ceased to live, and the doctor declared the cause of his death to be the rupture of an aneurism.

—A strange spectacle was recently presented in a Prussian town when the levies of troops were about starting. The train was ready, but the wives of the soldiers opposed its departure, throwing themselves in their despair on the rails in front of the locomotive. Recourse to violence could not be employed. What was to be done? The station-master proposed to the women to accompany their husbands, but in separate carriages. The poor creatures consented; but when the train started, the carriages with the women did not move. The station-master had them detached, but wisely took care to get away before the discovery was made.

—The records of the French assize courts this session are well seasoned with sensational crimes. In the Nievre a woman has been convicted of poisoning her five children, one after the other, when the luckless innocents were still on the breast. They were registered as having died of convulsions; a very frequent source of infant mortality, for I have known as many as seven infants sent out of the world by the same malady without exciting any wonder. She next poisoned her husband, then her paramour, then her grandchild, and lastly her son-in-law. Her guilt was clearly established, for four of the victims' corpses were, so to speak, embalmed with the quantity of arsenic administered. And such is the repugnance of French juries to capital punishment that this monster got the benefit of extenuating circumstances.

MR. WM. JESSUP, the celebrate Sheffield (England) cutlery manufacturer, is now in St. Louis, attending to business with his branch house there. Mr. Jessup is reported to be worth twenty millions.

THE St. Louis Democrat says: "We understand that Mr. Jas. Shea, who died day before yesterday, left his whole fortune—over $100,000—to the Sister's Hospital. He had frequently been nursed in that excellent institution."

A WASHINGTON letter says: "There seems to be but little value to money here. The cost of living is exorbitant. One member of Congress, [Mr. Dodge of New York, who ousted Brooks], with his family, servants, and horses, lives at one of the hotels, and pays for his living one hundred and eighty dollars per day."

THE Rev. Henry Ward Beecher crawled through a pipe of his new church organ, the other day, on a challenge of one of his flock. He came out covered with dust and sweat, and exclaimed, as he touched the floor, "I want no man to tell me anything about this organ. I know all about it. I have been through it."

WE glean from our exchanges that during the past two weeks Abraham Lincoln was shot in a row in New York, George Washington detected as a chicken-thief in Boston, Andrew Jackson whipped his wife in Philadelphia, Benjamin Franklin robbed a bank in New Hampshire, and George B. McClellan died of the measles in New Jersey.

YOUNG KETCHUM, the forger, continues to behave himself at Sing Sing Prison, New York. He makes a very creditable bookkeeper in the shoe department. His father's family and his wife visit him very regularly, and he is in constant receipt of letters from old business companions. He is not confined to the rule of silence generally maintained in prison, but is allowed every possible privilege, being looked on as the victim of circumstances rather than as a studied malefactor.

THE New York Citizen says: "Mr. Greeley, it is believed, will complete, within the present month, his second and concluding volume of 'The American Conflict,' being a history, both political and military, of the recent rebellion. The sale of his first volume has only been limited by the productive powers of the publishing house; and we are glad to believe the author, from this work alone, will derive a fortune amply enabling him to carry out his favorite project of ceasing work, save as a pastime, and 'going off somewhere fishing.'"

—THE Cincinnati Commercial has an account of a family meeting of the Kumlers in Millville, Ohio. It was held on the estate of Mrs. Susan Kumler, who is now in her eighty-seventh year. According to The Commercial she has now living two hundred and thirty descendants of blood, as follows: Eleven children, eighty-four grand-children one hundred and thirty-two great-grand children, and three great great grand-children, with fifty-two by marriage, making a total of two hundred and eighty-two. Of this number two hundred and four were present.

A GOOD story is told of Wigfall, who, at the collapse of the rebellion, fell into the vicinity of a party of Union soldiers in Texas. Being well disguised, he entered freely into conversation with the soldiers of the guard, and, in the course of the conversation, asked what they would do with old Wigfall if they were to catch him. "Oh, we would hang him, certain," was the reply. "And you would serve him right," replied Wigfall. "If I should be with you, I have no doubt I should be pulling at the end of the rope myself!" The double entendre was not suspected, and its wit was therefore lost, but it is worth producing now.

PRINCE ALFRED of England has become Duke of Edinburgh, and is to take his seat in the House of Lords. Prince William Henry, Brother of King George III., was created, on the 10th of November, 1764, Duke of Gloucester and Edinburgh. The latter title was not used, though both were British peerages—the Crown having had no power to create a Scottisch peerage since the Act of Union of May 1707. The elder Duke of Gloucester and Edinburgh died in 1805, and was succeeded by his son, Prince William Frederick, at whose death, without issue, on the 30th of November, 1834, the two peerages became extinct. The title of Duke of Edinburgh is therefore a new creation in favor of Prince Alfred, and will be borne as his first title.

MR. LINCOLN was not a member of any church, but his religious views strongly inclined to those held by Theodore Parker. In 1858 Mr. Lincoln and his law partner, W. H. Herndon, invited Mr. Parker to lecture at Springfield, and both of them sat on the platform with him during the evening. Mr. Lincoln, however, manifested in his life more genuine religious feeling than any other American President, most of whom did not have enough religion to hurt their political prospects while living, nor, we fear, to help them much when dead. Mr. Lincoln's unaffected reliance upon Divine aid, and his frequent requests for prayer that he might be sustained in his arduous work, made a deep impression upon the people, and the feeling was almost universal that he was a thoroughly good man. Some of the leading clergymen of various denominations attempted to persuade him to join the church, and there were reports after his death that had he lived longer these efforts would have been successful. Of this, however, it is impossible to judge.—Rochester Express.

Art and Science.

—The Mechanics' Magazine says that coal oil is a better article for preserving sodium and potassium than naptha. In coal oil soda keeps its lustre for months and years, while in the purest naptha it is dimmed in a few days.

—It has lately been discovered by a German chemist that a most beautiful scarlet or purple dye may be produced from theine. This substance occurs in the leaves of a species of horse-chestnut and holly, which grow in Brazil, as well as in tea.

—Color-blindness is not a disease of vision but rather a remarkable condition of vision. Dalton discovered his color-blindness by hearing a geranium called red which head thought a light blue. Dugald Stewart could not tell a cherry from its leaves, only by the form.

—A Mr. Harding has been experimenting with open steel tubes, in which he inserts a charge of gunpowder backed by a felt wad, and, at a short distance in the rear, another felt wad, leaving an air space between. On the top of the charge of powder or cotton is a ball, in immediate contact with the charge. The charge is ignited in the usual manner at the end, and the effect on the ball seems to be that of a gun with a breech, while the wads are thrown out at the rear end of the tube, torn into lint, and the tube has no recoil.

—What is Saleratus? Wood is burnt to ashes, these are lixivated, and lye is the result. Lye is evaporated by boiling, black salt is the residuum. The salt undergoes purification by fire, and the potash of commerce is produced. By another process we change potash into pearlash. Now put these in sacks and place them over a distillery mash tub, where the fermentation evolves carbonic acid gas, and the pearlash absorbs it and is rendered solid; the product being heavier, whiter, and drier than the pearlash. It is now saleratus. How much such salts of lye and carbonic acid gas one can bear and remain healthy, is a question for a saleratus eater.

—Another explosive compound, more destructive than nitro-glycerine, has been brought to light. The chemical mixture is called sodium amalgam. It is never manufactured in very large quantities, though it has been advertised for sale in San Francisco, one firm claiming to have as much as 200 ounces for sale. The amount is not large, but when it is understood that the explosive power of one ounce is equal to about 25 pounds of gunpowder, or 2½ pounds of nitro-glycerine, it can be readily conceived that even if 15 or 20 ounces exploded in one place, it would create immense havoc. And when one further reflects that even so little a thing as a spoonful of water coming in contact with 200 ounces of sodium would cause an explosion equal to that which would be occasioned by the ignition of 5,000 pounds of powder, or the concussion of 500 pounds of nitro-glycerine, we can form some conception of its tremendous destructive power.

SOWED CORN.—We hope the dairy-men of the West will follow the practice of their eastern brethren, and sow corn for feeding the milch cows as the pastures begin to fail and water becomes scarce; indeed, at the approach of winter, some nutriment aside from that which the grasses afford, is indispensible if a full flow of milk is to be kept up, and the full profits of the dairy realized. We believe the experience of half a score of years among the dairy-men of Herkimer and Oneida counties, has proven conclusively that corn furnishes the cheapest and best food for this purpose; it grows luxuriantly, and is highly relished by the cows.

For sowing, we believe our Western or "Dent" corn as it is called, gives the most satisfactory yield. The ground upon which it is sown should be rich—any good prairie soil of course answering; it may be sown either broad-cast or in drills; if the latter way, about two and one-half bushels of seed to the acre will be required; if the former, it will take more, say three bushels per acre. Clean ground should always be chosen if possible.

Sowed corn is not alone good as a green food for cows, but properly cured and stacked or housed it is an excellent substitute for hay, as is well known; in fact, all kinds of stock are fond of it, and will thrive well upon it with very little other feed.

It is now time to put in the crop. Choose a place for sowing where it can be conveniently cut and fed, as it is bulky and heavy to handle and haul. The double row corn-planters with drill attachment answer admirably to put in the seed, if the drill system is to be adopted, or if no planter is used upon the place, as the amount of ground required is not large, it is not very laborious to put it in by hand.

A DEFENCE OF THE CROW.—The crow in many parts of the world is considered a marauder of the farm, and the gun in perseveringly used for his extermination. The most able writers on ornithology, and others who have studied his habits, agree that instead of being a robber and a pest to the farmer, he is one of his most faithful friends and greatest benefactors. He consumes in the course of the year vast quantities of grubs, worms and noxious vermin; he is a valuable scavenger, and clears the land of offensive masses of decaying animal substances; he hunts the grass fields, and pulls out and devours the underground caterpillars; wherever he perceives the sign of their operations as evinced by the wilted stalks; he destroys mice, young rats, lizards and snakes; lastly, he is a volunteer sentinel about the farm, and drives the hawk from its inclosures, thus preventing greater mischief than that of which he is himself guilty. It is chiefly during seed time and harvest that the depredations of the crow are committed; during the remainder of the year we witness only his services, and so highly are those services appreciated by those who have written of birds, that we cannot name an ornithologist who does not plead in his benalf.—Spirit of the Times.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The Metric System and its Equivalents.

The bill passed by the House of Representatives to authorize the use of the metric system of weights and measures, provides that the following tables shall be recognized in contracts and legal proceedings as the equivalents of the weights and measures of metric system. Any apparent complexity of the system will disappear when it is observed that it depends upon a single unit—the meter—and that any denomination of measure can be expressed in meters, square meters, or solid meters. The gram is the weight of a cube of water a hundreth of a meter on each side. For ordinary uses the words meter and gram are the only new words to be learned.

It should also be noticed that although the weights and measures are in value precisely the same as those used in Europe, the names have been so changed as to accord with the spirit of our language.

Irreverence of Young America.

In the Old School General Assembly, at its recent session in St. Louis, Rev. Dr. Thomas, in speaking about the insubordinate attitude of the Louisville Presbytery, dwelt at some length upon the contempt for all kinds of authority which prevails in this country, illustrating by the following anecdotes:

"The great want of our age, sir, is a spirit of obedience to law, of reverence for constituted and legitimate authority; whether in the family, the State, or the Church. Let me illustrate the temper and habits of Young America, sir, by an anecdote respecting the late Hon. B. F. Butler, whose sobriquet of 'Sandy Hill' was familiar to politicians of twenty years since. He was invited to a mission Sunday-school in the city of New York. The Superintendent introduced him to the boys as the Attorney-General of the United States, one of the most distinguished citizens of their native State, and an active friend of friendless youth, added while he pointed to the clock, that Mr. B. would limit his speech to fifteen minutes.

"Well, sir, they listened with fixed attention, but they kept an eye on the clock. The orator, warming with his theme, forgot the limitation of his time, and had passed the bound only a few seconds, when a tattered urchin, probably a newsboy, and so familiar with political slang terms, suddenly sprang up, and pointing to the clock, exclaimed, 'Sandy Hill, your time is out!' That, sir, is an illustration of our respect for those in authority.

"Sir, the tendency of our times—perhaps it may be a national abuse of the nature of our free institutions—is to despise government, to cultivate a spirit of insubordination. Why, sir, if you will pardon me for relating it, I had once a curious exemplification of Young Americanism in my own household. It has already appeared in the public prints without my consent, and, therefore, it may not be indecorous to allude to it. I had a little son about four years old, who, of course, I thought a very bright and promising fellow. During my temporary absence from home for a few days on one occasion, his mother relieved the weary interval with reading to him the story of the Revolution. The little fellow treasured up the scattered facts and anecdotes of the battle fields, until his youthful patriotism was kindled to a flame, and his blood began to boil. I returned home late in the night, when he was wrapped in slumber. He rose later than usual. While we sat at breakfast, he came down, and seated himself by my side in silence. He withheld the familiar welcome—the customary kiss. Evidently his mind was engrossed with something. He sat brooding his topic for a few moments, and then turning to me, he said. 'Father, are you British?' 'My son,' said I, 'I had the good or bad fortune to be born in England; but, like the Irishman, I was brought over here so early that I became a native.' 'Well, sir,' said he, his childish face all aglow, and shaking his little fist at me, 'We whipped you once, and can do it again.' [Great applause.]"

—Judge Jeffreys, of notorious memory, pointing with his cane to a man who was about to be tried, said: "There is a great rogue at the end of my cane." The man to whom he pointed, looking at him, said: "At which end, my lord?"

MR. DICKENS has a "special saloon car all to himself, as he travels about England to give his charming readings."

Erie Broad Gauge Railway.

We learn that the day express trains on this railway have been recently furnished with a new set of coaches, smoking and baggage cars, which are said to be far ahead of anything heretofore in use. These coaches were built at the company's shops, are 67 feet long, supported on six-wheeled trucks, and will seat comfortably 80 passengers. They have been fitted up without regard to expense, and the upholstery is really luxurious. The improvement in the formation of the backs of the seats, being so arranged as to fit every portion of the back like an easy chair, is a very desirable one; while special pains have been taken to give ample room for the limbs and support for the feet.

The smoking cars are furnished with cane seated revolving chairs, and at one end a news stand has been erected, where all the current literature, as well as a good cigar, can be obtained. On such a train as this, stopping at proper hours for breakfast, dinner and supper, at eating houses equal, if not superior, to most of the first class hotels in the country, travelers cannot fail to properly appreciate all that is being done for their comfort by the managers of this great thoroughfare, and at the same time enjoy the magnificent scenery abounding everywhere on the line of railway.—New York paper.

The regularity of the trains and freedom from accidents for several months past, indicate a marked improvement in railway management; that greater care is being exercised in the selection of competent, attentive men for all the subordinate positions, and that the comfort and safety of the traveling public is being considered by the managers of some of our principal lines, as well as the price they shall pay for transportation. As a practical illustration of our conclusions, we were to day informed that the Express trains of the Erie Railway did not miss a single connection east or west during the whole of April and May last, and that they were invariably on time. This for a company having between seven and eight hundred miles of line, with its enormous freight traffic, must be the result of careful management, improved road-bed and motive power, and last but not least, thorough discipline in the running department. The sound policy of the present managers of the Erie Railway in putting their property in such perfect condition as to enable them to do promptly and economically all the business that is offered, should commend itself to railway managers generally. The increased business and growing popularity of this great thoroughfare is the best evidence we can offer that the public properly appreciate whatever contributes to their welfare and comfort. With the new and improved day and night coaches with which the Erie is now equipped, it is really the most comfortable and attractive route from and to New York, Boston and New England cities

Super-Heated Steam.

The invention of Eben Danford, of Geneva, Illinois, patented about one year ago, by which super-heated steam could be generated and applied to the propulsion of machinery in a cheap and speedy manner, has excited much interest throughout the country, and secured a name and fortune for the inventor. But some few days ago William Conant, of the same place, came to Washington and succeeded in obtaining a patent for a "super-heated steam generator," which is destined not only to bring the inventor a fortune, but to prove a public blessing. Mr. Conant's invention differs from Mr. Danford's in this important particular—the former converts water into steam by passing through heated coils or tubes, and then forces it (the wet steam) into a heated receiver, where it is instantly changed or sublimated into dry, or super-heated steam, and then it is ready for its application to machinery, etc.; while the latter ejects water by means of a "rose sprinkler" into the super-heated receiver. The difference is specifically that the one ejects water and the other wet steam into the super-heated receiver. Mr. Conant claims a large economy in fuel and an excess of power over Mr. Danford, as well as a greater durability of his tubes and receiver.—American Royalist.

Atmospheric Resistance to Railroad Trains.

At a meeting of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the atmospheric resistance to railroad trains was shown. A set of cars made of pasteboard with the engine of the usual form and shape, was placed upon a horizontally revolving cam, attached to a vertical shaft, driven round by the force of a given weight; the time of the revolutions was measured by an instrument beating seconds. Then the proposed improved form of car and engine (which improvement consisted in the conical shape given to the front part of the engine, same shape also to the rear end of the last car, spaces between the cars covered with canvas, with some other lesser changes from the common form), was placed upon the same rotating arm. The result showed, with the same power applied and same weight of cars and engine, a saving of twenty-five per cent. in speed, which is, of course, equal to a gain of twenty-five per cent. of running expense—certainly a most important item for railroad directors and railroad stockholders to inquire into. The same has also been tried by the same parties with hand cars, upon some of the roads in Massachusetts, with equally favorable results.

A Novel Enterprise.

A progressive engineer proposes to connect New York with Jersey City by a cast iron tube laid in the bed of the river, five feet in diameter. The tube is to be cast in lengths of twelve feet, with spherical joints to allow for change of position, and is to be worked by the pneumatic method, for the purpose of transporting the Erie Railway freight from Long dock to the Pavonia ferry in New York. The plan is said to be perfectly feasible, while the principle is one that can be advantageously applied on a large scale. All the railroad lines diverging from New York will eventually enter it underground and concentrate in a single subterranean depot. Access to this will be much the most cheaply and expeditiously attained by the New Jersey and Long Island Railroads, through tubular iron tunnels, laid on the beds of the Hudson and East rivers.

—At Rousseville, Venango County, Pa., on the 15th, an exciting controversy occurred between the Hon. C. V. Culver and the Deputy Sheriff of Venango County, who seized a locomotive belonging to the Reno and Pithole Railroad at Plumer, intending to run it over to Rousseville and deposit it upon the Kersey Oil and Mining Company horse-railroad track. Mr. Culver came over from Reno to dispute the seizure and arrived at Rousseville in advance of the Sheriff, and demanded possession of the company's property. The officer refused to comply and Culver ordered his men to draw revolvers and take forcible possession. Subsequently the law prevailed and the officer took the property.

The Johnson National Convention.

WASHINGTON, June 25.

A National Union Convention of at least two delegates from each Congressional district of all the States, two from each Territory, two from the District of Columbia, and four delegates at large from each, will be held at the city of Philadelphia on the 15th of August next. Such delegates will be chosen by the electors of the several States who sustain the Administration in maintaining unbroken the Union of the States under the Constitution which our fathers established, and who agree in the following propositions, viz:

The Union of the States is in every case indissoluble, and is perpetual; and the Constitution of the United States and laws passed by Congress in pursuance thereof are supreme, constant and universal in their obligation.

The rights, the dignity, and the equality of the States in the Union, including the right of representation in Congress, are solemnly guaranteed by that Constitution, to save which from overthrow so much blood and treasure were expended on the late civil war.

There is no right anywhere to dissolve the Union, or no separate States from the Union either by voluntary withdrawal, by force of arms, or by Congressional action, neither by secession of States, nor by the exclusion of their loyal and qualified representatives, nor by the National Government in any form.

Slavery is abolished, and neither can nor ought to be re-established in any State or Territory within our jurisdiction.

Each State has the undoubted right to prescribe the qualifications of its own electors; and no external power rightfully can or ought to dictate, control, or influence the free and voluntary action of the States in the exercise of that right.

The maintenance inviolate of the rights of the States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic concerns according to its own judgment exclusively, subject only to the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depends, and the overthrow of that system by usurpation, in centralization of power in Congress, would be a revolution, dangerous to a Republican Government and destructive of liberty. Each House of Congress is made by the Constitution the sole judge of its election returns and qualification of its members; but the exclusion of loyal Senators and Representatives, properly chosen and qualified under the Constitution and laws, is unjust and revolutionary. Every patriot should frown upon all these acts and proceedings everywhere, which can serve no other purpose than to rekindle the animosities of war, and the effect of which upon our moral, social and material interests at home, and upon our standing abroad differing only in a degree is injurious like war itself. The purpose of the war having been to preserve the Union and Constitution by putting down the rebellion, and the rebellion having been suppressed, all resistance to the authority of the General Government being at an end, and the war having ceased, war measures should also cease, and should be followed by measures of peaceful administration, so that union, harmony and concord may be encouraged, and industry, commerce and the arts of peace revived and promoted; and the early restoration of all the States to the exercise of their constitutional powers in the National Government is indispensably necessary to the strength and defence of the Republic, and to the maintenance of the public credit.

All such electors in the thirty-six States and nine Territories of the United States, in the District of Columbia, who, in a spirit of patriotism and love for the Union, can rise above personal and sectional considerations and who desire to see a truly National Union Convention, which shall represent all the States and Territories of the Union, assemble as friends and brothers under the national flag, to hold council together upon the State of the Union, and to take measures to avert possible dangers from the same, are specially requested to take part in the choice of such delegates. But no delegate will take a seat in such convention who does not loyally endorse the principles set forth, and who is not attached in true allegiance to the Constitution, the Union, and the Government of the United States.

—A Scotchman had reason to perform a journey to London. Beside him in the train was a fellow passenger, with whom he entered into conversation, and soon the twain became quite intimate. During the pause in the conversation, the gentleman reached back his hand in the direction of the pocket in his swallow-tail coat, saying 'I believe we must have snuff." On this, Sawnie, by a series of vigorous blows, immediately proceeded to set his nose in order for the reception of the titilating beverage; but after thoroughly searching all his pockets in vain, the gentleman was at last obliged to conclude that he had unfortunately forgotten his snuff box on leaving home. With the most utter dismay pictured in his countenance, Sawnie, on hearing this announcement, cast a reproachful look at the gentleman, exclaiming: 'My God, man what iffde ye do that? I had as much in my nose as wud hae kerried me to Lunnun!

THE REAL VELPAU FEMALE PILL.

[WARRANTED FRENCH.]

THESE PILLS, so celebrated many years ago in Paris for the relief of female irregularities, and afterward so notorious for their criminal employment in the practice of abortion, are now offered for sale for the first time in America. They have been kept in comparative obscurity from the fact that the originator, Dr. Velpau, is a physician in Paris of great wealth and strict conscientious principles, and has withheld them from general use, lest they should be employed for unlawful purposes. In overcoming Female Obstructions, Falling of the Womb, Whites, Green Sickness, Suppression, Retention, or Immoderate Flow of the Monthly Discharges, they seem to be truly omnipotent, bursting open the flood-gates from whatever cause may have stopped them; but they are offered to the public only for legitimate uses, and all agents are forbidden to sell them when it is understood that the object is unlawful. Married ladies should never take them when there is any reason to believe themselves pregnant, for they will be sure to produce a miscarriage.

These pills are entirely safe under all circumstances, being composed entirely of substances from the vegetable kingdom.

Each box has the coat of arms for the City of Paris stamped on the box, with the words "Trade Mark" in French, to counterfeit which is a misdemeanor, and all persons will be dealt with according to law.

☞ Full directions accompany every box.

Ladies can obtain a box sealed from the eyes of the curious, by inclosing One Dollar and six post-office stamps to any respectable druggists, or to O. G. STAPLES, General Agent for the United States, Watertown, N. Y.

N. B.—All orders filled promptly the same day they are received.

Customers are informed that every item ordered is ALWAYS sent, if to be had in the city.

To those about to purchase a Piano Forte, we would say, consider well before you purchase; do not throw your money away on any of the cheap and worthless instruments that now flood the market; there are hundreds of traveling peddlers now roaming the country and trying to force their worthless instruments on the public at any price: in the end you will find it economy to buy the best.

JUST PUBLISHED.—The American Organ, or Parlor Organists Companion, containing a complete course of instructions for the Melodeon. Price $2,50. Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address all orders.

PATENT IMPROVED

MELODEONS,

MADE ONLY AT TOLEDO, OHIO.

☞ These improved Melodeons have received the FIRST PREMIUM in every case, including the Michigan State Fair at Adrian September 21, 1865, over all other competitors, as being the best Melodeons on exhibition.

Every Instrument Warranted for

FIVE YEARS.

I have all the facilities for manufacturing these superior Melodeons, including steam power and machinery (every department being under my personal supervision,) and I feel confident, with my unsurpassed improvements, that I am now placing before the public a superior instrument, larger and with the evenness of tone not heretofore obtained by any other Melodeon manufacturer. The finish and durability of these instruments are second to none. With my unsurpassed facilities I hope to continue to furnish these Melodeons at much less than Eastern prices. All orders will receive as prompt attention as if parties were here to select. Factory, at 143 and 148 Summit street.

☞ Now let me give you reasons why it will be to your advantage to buy of me. In the first place you will have a large assortment to select from, comprised of the BEST made in the country. Again, you have your Piano or Melodeon put up in your house, in good condition without further trouble, And in the third place you will buy cheap, and get a good, reliable instrument. A great many Pianos are spoiled by getting out of order in moving, and there being no person to put them properly in order, they are used in that condition and materially injured.

I buy my Pianys at the LOWEST CASH PRICES, and my sales being large, I do not require a great profit on each one. I now ask you to consider these facts, and should you want a Piano, Melodeon or Organ, write me giving name and place of residence, and if we do not agree in price, terms, &c., it shall not be my fault.

Instruments securely packed to go any distance free of charge.

☞ Send for Circulars. Sheet Music, Band Instruments, Piano Stools, and everything unusually kept in a First Class Music sent Post paid, on receipt of price. Dealers and Teachers supplied at the usual rates.—All orders should be addressed to Change of Time.

By referring to our time table, printed in another column, our readers will see that another change of time has taken place on the Jackson Branch. There are now three trains daily each way—two passenger trains and one freight. Superintendent Hatch is in every way calculated to fill the position he occupies, being gentlemanly and courteous, has gained the friendship of all with whom he has become acquainted and is evidently determined to accomodate every town and village upon the road in the best possible manner. At least, the villages on the Jackon Branch have been accomodated better during his term of office thus far than ever before. Passengers can now go from here to Detroit or Toledo and back the same day and by means of the freight train they can go north earlier and south later in the day than formerly. The time of the mails is also somewhat changed. The southern mail departs at 6.50 A. M. and the northern at 1.08 P. M.

☞ The annual Musical Soiree of Prof. Watts pupils took place at Doc. M. A. Pattersons on Friday evening the 6th inst, when a choice programme of Vocal and Instrumental Music was presented. The pieces were very fine and well executed and reflect great credit on both master and pupil. Many thanks are due to Miss Augusta Patterson for her kindness in closing the entertainment with such good things.

The Prof. returns his thanks to his patrons and friends for their kindnes during his professional visits to Tecumseh and wishes them all every success.

Fourth of July in Milan.

A Pic-nic came of in School District No. 5, Milan, Monroe county. The children of the P. M. Sunday School were in attendance, and deported themselves with becoming dignity and propriety. Marshall and Vocal music waited on the occasion. The former was conducted by Joseph Rice and C. B. Caswell, the latter by Chas. W. Williamson.

The Declaration of Independence was read by Socrates Hoag. The address was delivered by Rev. Peter Sharp.—These anniversary exercises were a novelty to the place. Thirty years had elapsed since "the oldest inhabitant" H. Vandeventere had felled the first tenant of this then "vast wilderness—boundless contiguity of shade." Solitude heard the sound, and retired. Slowly and with many hardships, the settlement increased. Cabbins were built, roads were opened, and the sturdy forests retired before the "axman's resounding blows;" to be succeeded by fruitful fields and remunerating harvests. It is therefore fitting that a people whose first settlement has so many resemblances to that of the Pilgrims, should celebrate this aniversary of their indepenance with emotions of gratitude and praise. It is fitting that a people who still feel the strokes of sad bereavement, by the late contest for the perpetuity of the boon of liberty, and equal rights, secured by the blood of the Revolutionary Fathers, should commemorate to with becoming ceremonies, their countries natal day, and teach their children lessons of patriotism, and determined opposition to every foe to the Constitution or the flag of their country. P. S.

WANTED.—Two or three good girls, to work with Sewing Machines. Apply to E H. Hoag.

Where is the Monument?

One year ago last Fourth a movement was inaugurated by the towns of Tecumseh, Raisin, Ridgeway and Macon to erect a Soldiers Monument. A Fourth of July celebration was held for the express purpose of raising funds for that object and by the joint assistance of the Dinner and the famous boquet presented by Mrs. Smith of Adrian, a fund of eight hundred dollars or upwards was raised. A few weeks after a permanent organization was formed and an additional sum to a large amount raised by subscription. The whole sum already secured must reach about the figure of fifteen hundred dollars. But for the past six months not a word has been hisped about the monument, no one knows how much money is raised, or how much it is proposed to raise, how costly a monument will be built, when it will be erected, or whether it will be erected at all. Franklin has quietly gone to work and put up a monument that is an honor to the town, while Tecumseh, as usual, appears to be enjoying a Rip Van Winkle nap. We think this matter should be investigated forthwith. Either the project should be abandoned entirely, or the work should be pressed forward at once, for the longer it cools, the harder it will be to warm the subject up again to a working heat. Let us hear a word from the officers of the Monument Association. Our readers are anxious to know what the prospect is for a Soldiers Monument in Tecumseh.

☞ The Good Templars will favor our citizens on Friday evening next with a public entertainment and exercises consisting of an Oration, Poem, two Declamations, a Literary paper and some good Vocal and Instrumental music.

The exercises promise to be quite interesting and all, whether members of the Lodge or not are cordially invited to attend.

The circus consists of five distinct shows, containing 50 performers, 5 original clowns, 20 educated ponies and 6 lady riders, and a very large corps of distinguished acrobats, gymnasts &c. The colored boy, Louis, one of the Equestrian wonders of the world, who has formerly belonged to Jeff. Davis; Master Frank, the distinguished and dashing Lilliputian Rider and the Conrad brothers, the champion gymnasts of the world all travel with this show. The whole Exhibition employs over 120 men and 200 Horses. All who desire to attend the best show of the season should go to the Great Combination.

Accidents.

A few days ago, a young man who worked in a Stave factory at Belleville went to Ypsilanti to get his life insured. Not finding the agent in town he returned to his work and the same day, lost his right hand by a buzz saw. He was poor and had a family to support. If he had been fortunate enough to have held a policy in the National Life and Health Ins. Company of Kalamazoo, he would have received $375,00 while disabled from this accident.

Not long since a Mr. Shaler residing in Macon, was kicked by a horse and instantly killed. His legal heirs would have received $3000, had his life been insured in the "National."

A young man by the name of Gould who also resides in Macon, recently severed the cords of his heel with an axe. If he had been insured in the "National" he would have received $15, per week while disabled.

A young lady was thrown from a buggy while returning home from the Free Methodist Camp Meeting—which was held near Dundee, last week and instantly killed.

The drowning of young McIntire in the mill pond a few days since and hundreds of like accidents, serve to warn us of the uncertainty of our existence and of the necesity of a safe and reliable insurance upon our life.

The travelers Tickets of this company are superior to those of any other. They insure against all accidents to the person while traveling, while other companies insure only against accident happening to the public conveyance. In a word the "National" insures the person and not the Conveyance. A Ticket in the National will cover twice as many accidents as a Ticket in any other company.

These tickets are for sale by all agents and also at G. T. Ketcham's Book Store, Tecumseh.

☞ Dr. Curtis' Headache and Dyspeptic Pills have become so very popular and the large and increasing demand for them has caused him to have them sugar coated so that they are much more pleasant to use. For Nervous Headache, Sick Headache, Liver Complaints, Constipation of the Bowels and Costiveness, these pills are as absolutely a specific as any combination of medicine ever found.—Price 50 cents per box and every box warranted.

☞ Thayer, Noyes & Co's Circus showed in Tecumseh on Monday last and gave entire satisfaction. It was the first "show" that has visited us this season, and so, as a matter of course it was well patronized. The tent was well filled both afternoon and evening. The performance was far superior to most exhibitions of the kind, the riding, vaulting and gymnastic exercises were excellent, and the general tone of the programme was superior to the majority presented by traveling troupes. We feel confident that no one who attended begrudged his fifty cents admission. This circus has justly acquired the reputation of being one of the best now traveling.

CONFESSED AT LAST.—That Herrick Allen's Gold Medal Saleratus is the best article known for making nice light Bread, Biscuit, Pies, Puddings, &c. Baseless imitators are trying to palm off to the public their article, saying it is Gold Medal, or as good; therefore, all who would preserve their stomachs and health, look and see that the name of Herrick Allen is on the wrapper, and be not put off with the spurious because the Merchant tells you that it is as good. Have nothing but the genuine Gold Medal.—Dyspeptics can use it, and it will do them good. Try it.

Miscellany.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

A TRAVESTIE.

A cringing, stony hearted Jew, who had an only daughter.
Called Shylock was this noted Jew by reason of his pate,
For it was bald and shiny as a bran new pewter plate.
His daughter's name was Jessica, he loved her passing well,
But whether more than "monish," 'tis hard for us to tell.
Close by there dwelt Antonio, a merchant famed and rich,
Who trafficked upon the seas in merchandise and "stich."
He had a friend, Bassanio, with brains but "nary cent;"
And he was "speony" on a gal and much inclined to vent.
Miss Portia the damsel's name, whose dad, her choice to baffle,
To win the prize Bassanio was bound to risk his all,
But when he came to count the cost, his bank account was small.
Straight to Antonio he goes to raise a little "tin"
But he thought rich was rather short, for his ships had not got in;
Quoth the Venetian, let us hie straightway unto the Jew.—
Shylock will lend upon my bond enough for me and you.
"Three thousand shekels," quoth the Jew, "'tish a large sum to lend?"
You blackguards me sometimes, you know, but now you wish my friend;
Well, I gets the monish for you, and thus shall you be bound;
Of your fair flesh, if you don't pay, you gives me "shush" one pound."
So to the notary's forth they go, the Christian and the Jew,
They sign the bond, the cash is got to put Bassanio through.
Straight to Miss Portia's house he goes, in "gorgeous" array,
Woos the fair maid, selects aright, and bears his bride away.
The three months passed, the bond came due; but never heard the while
Did unfortunate Antonio succeed in "striking ile;"
He did not even see a ship though they'd shipped many seas;
The wind that blew bad luck to him was a cutting sort of breeze.
For judgment now before the duke the several parties set out,—
Old Shylock with a pair of scales, and butcher knife in hand,
Bassanio with his ducats, though they came a day too late,
And Antonio the merchant, nerved up to meet his fate.
The Duke he makes a pretty speech expounding all the law,
Declares the bond is forfeit, the case without a flaw.
Bassanio makes wry faces, and calls himself a lubber;
Antonio, majestic, bids him stop his doleed blubber,
The Jew he whets his butcher knife, to finish up his grudge,
When, enter Mistress Portia, disguised as a judge.
Balthasar, J., she represents, while to help along the "lark;"
Her waiting maid Nerissa, personifies the clerk
The learned judge reviews the case, decides the Jew is right,
But hopes that he'll be merciful and take the cash at "sight."
"Oh, wise judge!" old Shylock cries, a second Daniel thou,—
Who ever saw such wisdom neath such a youthful brow;
I'll not have the Christian's ducats, with them he shall not part;
But as it's your decision, I prefer to take his heart."
"Take, then," the youthful judge replies, "take then thy cruel knife,
Cut quickly out thy 'pound of flesh,' and end this cruel strife;
But if you shed one drop of blood, of Christian blood, old Jew!
By all the tribes of Israel I'll bet we'll put you through.
No blood is thine, but simply flesh, and only just a pound—
I rather think, old skinflint, that Venetian law you've found.
Now cut away, you rascal, and be sure you hit the thing,
For if you don't I promise you your carcass soon shall swing."
"Ish that de law? if dat ish so, I tink I takes the money."
"Oh, no, you don't!" says Mistress Judge, "you're late for that, 'honey;'
And more, for that you undertook to settle Christian's 'hash,'
Besides your life, the law provides that you give up your cash.
One half shall be Antonio's, the merchant whom you hate,
The other half Bassanio's, the balance to the state.
If you conclude to hang yourself, we hope that you'll not falter,
And as you're poor, the State, I'm sure will furnish you a halter."
Exit the Jew, the curtain falls, the judge resumes her finances,
Love smiles on all the rest of course, as the fifth act announces.

C. W. S.

Victoria as a Law-Breaker.

Queen Victoria, who was greatly in debt when she ascended the British throne in 1837, is believed now to be one of the richest sovereigns in Europe, the King of Wurtemburg and the Emperor of Austria probably having more "real estate," but less cash in hand. The Duchess of Kent, who never spent more than a third of the $150,000 a year settled on her by Parliament, saved up a large sum, which, by investments and re-investments, made a handsome amount, and every shilling of this she bequeathed to Victoria, her daughter. The late Mr. Joseph Neeld, a millionaire who had more money than brains, was so "loyal" that, passing over his blood relations, most of whom were poor, he bequeathed $2,500,000 in hard cash to Queen Victoria, which (to use the usual cant of the court), "Her Majesty was most graciously pleased to accept." Prince Albert, who was voted $150,000 a year by an obsequious Parliament, had that income doubled by salaries from various lucrative sinecures which his wife heaped into his lap, and, on his death in December, 1861, bequeathed his savings to her, being only $5,000,000. Ever since her accession, nearly thirty years ago, Queen Victoria has made large savings out of her income, the gross amount of which, from the parliamentary grant called "the civil list," and from the net revenue of the Duchy of Lancaster, exceeded $2,000,000 a year. During the four years that have elapsed since her husband's death, Victoria's expenditure was so small that she probably saved three-fourths of her income, and lived upon only $500 000 a year. In addition to all this cash, making a pretty little capital of over $10,000,000, Victoria also succeeded to a large tract of eligable building ground at Kensington, which Prince Albert bought "for a song" (who would presume to cutbid the Queen's husband!) some years ago, upon part of which he built some handsome houses, the rent of which he fixed so high that none but the "upper ten" can lease them. However, that property is looking up, and "eligible building lots" thereon are frequently sold for about twenty times the amount paid for them by Prince Albert.

In add tion to the allowance of two million dollars per annum to "Her Most Gracious Majesty," she has not one cent of rent to pay, no insurance, no taxes, no repairs—and any alterations are paid out of the public money. Her late husband, who knew how to "turn an honest penny," converted eight hundred acres of Windsor Park into a model farm, for which he paid no rent, and actually refused to pay any poor rates, until the overseers of the parish seized some of his stock and implements, and were about selling them under the authority of the law, when, very ungraciously, he paid the amount claimed, with costs, and grumbled at the laws which, having no respect for persons, had compelled him, a pauper German Prince, to contribute his proper share to the maintenance of the poor. On that model farm he reared a great number of stock, and—in the happy condition of sitting rent free—competed, with no small success, at various cattle shows, frequently gaining the best premiums in competition with breeders of stock who, less fortunate, had to pay rent for their land.

Queen Victoria succeeded to her husband's five million dollars, his model farm, and his building property at Kensington, by virtue of his "last will and testament," which left her sole executrix. Oddly enough, that will has never been proved at Doctors' Commons; nor has the probate or succession duty been paid upon it; nor have the documents been deposited, as the law enacts, in the usual public repository in London where any will can be read on payment of a shilling. This curious case is not without a parallel. George I., the first British monarch of German birth, died in Germany in June, 1727, and was succeeded by his eldest son, historically known as George II. At the first council held by this royal personage, Dr. Wake, Archbishop of Canterbury, produced the late King's will, and delivered it to the new sovereign, expecting that it would be opened there and then, and publicly read. The King put the document into his pocket, and walked out of the room without saying a word. It was his duty, as trustee, to have demanded the publication, or at least the registration of the document, but a fear of giving offense to the living prevented his performing the trust delegated to him by the dead monarch. None of the other courtiers dared to do what he, high in station as Primate of England, had neglected to do. Whispers went abroad that the King had burned his father's will, and, at all events, its injunctions remained unfulfilled. It was known, however, that George I. had bequeathed $200,000 to one of his mistresses (Madame Schulenburg, whom he created Duchess of Kendal), and a still greater legacy to his sister, the Queen of Prussia. The well known Earl of Chesterfield, who had married Melosina de Schulenburg, only daughter and heiress of the Duchess of Kendal, insisted on her mother-in-law's rights, and got $100,000 from George II. in discharge of the claim; but the legacy to the Queen of Prussia was never paid, though her son, well known as Frederick the Great, made frequent and rough demands for a settlement, which his royal uncle never made. Horace Walpole has stated the particulars in full. That Queen Victoria, whose fiat gives completion to all laws framed and passed by the British Parliament, should thus personally violate the common law of succession, is much wondered at in England. But "what is every one's business is nobody's business," so it is not likely that she will be called on to register, deposit, and prove her defunct husband's last will and testament.—Philadelphia Press.

Mistakes of Physicians.

Oliver Wendell Holmes (physician, philosopher, and poet) gives the following account of some mistakes which have been made in medicine:

"Sooner or later everybody is tripped up in forming a diagnosis. I saw Velpau, the great French surgeon, tie one of the carotid arteries for a supposed aneurism—which was only a little harmless tumor—and he killed his patient. Dr. Dease, of Dublin, was more fortunate in a case he boldly declared an abscess, while others thought it an aneurism. He thrust a lancet into it, and proved himself in the right. Soon after he made a similar diagnosis. He thrust in his lancet as before, and out gushed the patient's blood, and his life with it. The next morning Mr. Dease found him dead and floating in his blood. He had divided the femoral artery. I have doomed people, and seen others doom them, over and over again, on the strength of physical signs, and they have lived in the most contumacious and scientifically unjustifiable manner, and some are living still. I see two men in the street very often, who were both as good as dead in the opinion of all who saw them in their extremity. People will insist upon living, sometimes, though manifestly moribund.

"In Dr. Elder's life of Kane, you will find a story of this sort told by Dr. Kane himself:

"The captain of the ship was dying of scurvy, but the crew mutinied, and he gave up dying for the present to take care of them. An old lady near her end, got a little vexed about a proposed change in her will; ordered a coach; was driven twenty miles to the house of a relative, and lived four years longer.

"Cotton Mather tells some good stories which he picked up in his experience or out of his books, showing the untenable equilibrium of prognosis. Simon Stone was shot in nine places, and as he lay for dead the Indians made two hacks with a hatchet to cut his head off. He got well, however, and was a lusty fellow in Cotton Mather's time. Jabez Musgrave was shot with a bullet that went in his ear and came out of the eye on the other side. A couple of bullets went through his body also. Jabez got well, however, and lived many years.

"Per contra, Colonel Rossiter, cracking a plumbstone with his teeth, broke a molar and lost his life. We have seen physicians dying, like Spigellus, from a scratch; and a man who had a crowbar shot through his head alive and well. These extreme cases are warnings. But you can never be too cautious in your prognosis, in view of the great uncertainty of the course of any disease, not long watched, and the many unexpected turns it may take."

Insects for Food.

In some latitudes, insects are considered a great luxury. Rome has its snail market as well as its fish and meat markets, and the historian says that in the most luxurious days of Rome, the tables of the banqueting halls were graced with dishes of fattened caterpillar grubs of great lusciousness. In Northern Africa, wagon loads of locusts are brought into the cities to furnish their inhabitants with a very popular dish. They are preferred by the Moors to pigeons, who consider two or three hundred of them a moderate quantity for each person at the table. In other parts of Africa the white ants are the chosen luxuries for the table. They are parched in iron pots over a gentle fire, and then, without sauce, are served up as delicious food. A distinguished traveler says that he has often partaken of this dish, and thinks it delicate, nourishing, and wholesome, resembling in taste sugared cream or almond paste. And why should we sneer at the African for dining upon white ants? The Arab is as much disgusted with our use of the oyster as we can be with his parched locusts. The Chinaman dines on the chrysalis of the silk worm, and derides the Frenchman for his love of frog and snail soup. We glory in clam chowder, fried oysters and roasted crabs, and profess a disgust for a distant people because their breakfast is made of roasted spiders.

We don't know but there may yet be found in the insect world greater luxuries for our tables than we have ever gathered from the treasures hid in the sands. Indeed, an eminent entomologist has pronounced, upon his own authority, the large grasshopper to be excellent food; but he is in advance in his boldness which few are yet ready to imitate. But we have followed that most daring man who first swallowed an oyster, and we honor him, whoever he may be, as a benefactor of his race, for having introduced us to such a luxury.

THE NORTH POLE.—Two French gentlemen recently explored the island of Spitzbergen in a manner never before done. They have measured the mountains, mapped the whole coast, examined the vegetable products, the geological composition, &c., of the island. They found that the long day, extending over several months, during which the sun never sets, became intensely hot after a month or two, by the unceasing heat from the sun. In this period vegetation springs up in great luxuriance and abundance. The North Pole is only a matter of 600 miles from the island, and it is thought by the two explorers, as by many others, that the pole itself, and the sea which is supposed to surround it, could be reached from Spitzbergen without any great difficulties being encountered. A singular fact noticed by the explorers in connection with this island is the enormous quantities of floating timber which literally covers the waters of the bays and creeks. A careful examination of the character, condition, and kind of those floating logs would, no doubt, lead to a conclusion as to whence and how they came, and probably suggest new theories for the solution of geographical problems connected with the Arctic Seas.

At Memphis, about 3 P. M. on the 3d, a policeman was shot by two drunken negroes. The difficulty originated in a bar room. The negroes went in and ordered drinks, when the officer stepped up and ordered the bar keeper not to sell liquor to blacks. He lived but ten minutes after being shot. Bystanders then demanded the blacks, and would have lynched them if more policemen had not arrived. The negroes were remanded to jail to await examination. The affair caused much excitement. The jailor has been notified to keep his assistants fully armed to resist any attack made.

The other horses were valued in the aggregate at $3,000. The coaches and carriages destroyed are valued at $4,000. Loss on buildings, $6,000. A colored man named Richardson is under arrest on suspicion of setting the fire.

A terrible fire on July 4th and 5th destroyed one half of the city of Portland, Maine. The fire swept completely through the city, destroying everything in its course so completely that the lines of the streets can hardly be traced for a distance of one and a half miles long by a quarter of a mile wide. Many buildings, perhaps 50, were blown up to check the flames, but the inhabitants could scarcely do more than flee with their families to the upper part of the city, saving such goods as they could carry. The Custom-House being fire-proof, escaped, though greatly damaged. The court records in the upper story are probably destroyed. The splendid city and country building off Congress street, which was nearly fire-proof, was considered safe, and it was piled full of furniture by the neighboring residents, and then it was swept away with all its contents. Half the city is destroyed, and that half includes nearly all the business portion, excepting the heavy business in Commercial street. All the banks and newspaper offices are burned, and but three printing offices are left. All the jewelry establishments, wholesale dry goods stores, several churches, the telegraph offices, nearly all the stationary stores, and the majority of the business places are destroyed. Captain Henry Inman has telegraphed for 1,500 tents to accommodate the homeless families, and the United States authorities at Boston filled the order. The Bostonians also sent up large quantities of cooked food to feed the homeless inhabitants. This is the most extensive and distressing calamity that has happened to an American city during the present generation. Not even the war, with its many sad instances of destruction by fire and bombardment, produced anything so terrible. A city of nearly or quite fifty thousand inhabitants—a city full of wealth and embellished with hundreds of noble buildings, public and private—is half destroyed and its business streets almost entirely obliterated with ashes and blackened ruins.

Financial and Commercial.

Business on the Cincinnati street railways for five months show the total earnings to be one hundred and sixty-one thousand dollars.

Secretary Fessenden, in December, 1864, estimated the receipts for customs for the fiscal year ending last Saturday, at $70,000,000, whereas they have actually exceeded $170,000,000. His total estimates of revenue were about $156,000,000 below the actual receipts.

The parties were pursued and the wife secured, but the Colonel, with the money, escaped.

The recent homestead law, to which the emancipated blacks are to be admitted, and from which those whites engaged in the rebellion are to be excluded, opens up all the public land in the South to actual settlers. The following is a statement of the quantity of this land:

	Acres.
In Arkansas	9,298,012.70
In Alabama	6,732,058.08
In Florida	19,319,635.01
In Louisiana	6,228,107.45
In Mississippi	4,705,739.03

In all, forty-six million three hundred and ninety-eight thousand and odd acres, of which thirty millions are known to be good arable land. This will give nearly four hundred thousand homesteads, and support nearly two millions of people.

The bill recently reported from the House Committee on the Judiciary, for the establishment of a National Bureau of Insurance, makes the bureau self-sustaining, while it offers security in the matter of insurance, by requiring all companies who may act under the law to deposit United States bonds—the amounts varying according to their capital stock. No party is permitted to transact Fire, Marine, and Life Insurance at the same time. The object of the proposed legislation is to give every Company an opportunity to show its solvency, in order that the public may be guarded against fraud, the principle being similar to that now applied to National Banking Associations.

Last Monday just before noon, a boy belonging to the banking house of Tyler, Ullman & Co, of Chicago, was sent to the Fourth National Bank with Ten Thousand Dollars. While going along the east side of Clark street, opposite the Court House, he involuntarily looked at the book, which he carried in his hand, when he discovered that the money was gone. He returned to the bank immediately and reported his loss. He says he did not stop anywhere, and that he carried the money in such a manner that it could not drop or blow out of the book. He has no idea whatever, what became of the money. The probabilities are that he was the victim of some pickpocket prestidigitator. No clue has yet been obtained of the money.

The June report of the Agricultural Committee gives a comparison between the amount of raw cotton imported from the United States into Great Britain during the four months of last year, and the four corresponding months of the present year. It exceeds the quantity imported from India by almost one hundred per cent., and almost exactly equals the total from all other localities. It is equivalent to 503,726 bales, of 400 pounds. The report says half a million of bales in four months and $70,000,000 are respectable figures in the trade with one foreign nation, even for the palmiest days of cotton shipping from the ports of the United States. The report also shows that Great Britain buys this year ten times as much wheat from Russia as from the United States, and from France nearly six times as much. Only a little over 4 per cent. of her seven millions of hundred weight are brought from the United States.

The Clearing House Association of Chicago held a meeting on the evening of the 30th ult., at which the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, Unanimously, as the sense of this Association, that the proposed amendment to the National Banking Law, by which the country banks of all the western and northwestern States, and territories, are required to redeem their notes in New York, instead of the great commercial centres of the west, as originally provided for, is calculated to work injuriously to the financial interests of the country, by the concentration which would naturally follow of so large an aggregate of bank balances in that city; and that on behalf of the banking interests of the northwest, this association earnestly remonstrates against the same.

Resolved, That this association respectfully invite representatives of the National Banks of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Wisconsin, Minnesota and the northwestern territories, to meet in convention in this city on the 12th day of September next, for consultation with reference to such measures as may be deemed proper for the protection of their interests, and commercial and financial wants of their portion of the country.

The Atlantic Cable.

It is supposed the Great Eastern would sail from Valentia on the 30th, to make another attempt to connect the continents by a submarine telegraph cable. The cable fleet is to consist of the Great Eastern, the steamship William Cary, the screw steamers Medway and Albany, and the man-of-war Terrible. The shore end will be taken on board the William Cary, and the Medway is to carry a portion of the old cable. When the ends of the cable shall have been joined at Valentia, the fleet will sail, taking care to keep away from the previous route, so that the cables will not be crossed, thus destroying the electric current. It is said that the fleet will be most thoroughly equipped, that faults discovered in the machinery last year have been remedied, and that the paying out and picking up machinery is the product of the best mechanical skill of Great Britain. Among the appliances prepared are the "double drum" of the hauling machinery, entirely new and calculated for a strain of sixteen tons, worked by steam engines of forty horse power; dynameters carefully adjusted with weights and scales to show the exact strain to which the cable is subjected; grappling ropes twenty miles in length, made of the same strands as the cable; buoy ropes for temporary use, &c., &c. The management of the Great Eastern is intrusted to Captain Anderson, as before, assisted by Captain Moriarty at the compasses. Mr. Beckwith again has charge of the ship's engines. The renowned Mr. DeSauty is superceded by Willoughby Smith as electrician. Mr. Canning and Mr. Clifford are responsible for the handling of the cable.

A PARIS writer says the Emperor has had private wires attached to the different telegraphs, and sends private telegrams with his own hands to Count Bismark at Berlin, and General La Marmora at Florence.

The Battle in Paraguay.

The following anti-Paraguayan account is from the Buenos Ayres Standard of May the 9th:

Yesterday the Espigador arrived, bringing the very important news of a terrific jungle fight, in which the courage, bravery, and heroism of the Brazilians are signally conspicuous; in fact, as will be seen by the following details, the whole of Flores' vanguard would have been completely annihilated but for a Brazilian band of heroes, who cut through a solid Paraguayan square and thus saved Flores.

On the 2d inst., the Paraguayans, some eight thousand strong, at one o'clock in the day advanced on Flores and attacked his position. Lopez in person was in command. As the Paragnayans were four to one it was short work. The fight was very sharp; some one thousand six hundred men and thirty one officers of Flores were soon hors de combat. Flores acted with the greatest bravery, shouting vehemently to his men, until he got so hoarse th t he lost his voice; two horses were shot under him and three of his aids were also killed, but the weight of the enemy was too great, and the Orientals, &c., had to fall back with great loss, the victorious Paraguayans making the evening hideous with their yells. They captured Flores' artillery and completely hemmed in the hero of Yatcy.

Osorio saw that the moment had arrived when it was possible to make a dash to save him. He led on the splendid regiment of the Voluntaries de la Patria, the best Brazilian soldiers in the field; they charged under a cruel fire from the enemy. Every tree in the forest, every branch on the road, belched out flame from the myriads of Paraguayans, but his brave forlorn hope, nothing daunted, rushed with fixed bayonets, and cut through a solid square of the enemy. Flores was saved; but the heroic band of Brazilians which entered the fight several hundred strong was reduced to forty-one men.

The Paraguayans pushed on after Flores' reinforcements came up, and the victors became vanquished, the allies closed on the enemy, and pen cannot paint the horrors of that route. Inch by inch the Paraguayans fought, fell, and were trampled on, the guns were retaken, banners captured, and two small Paraguayan pieces also seized. At last night terminated the carnage. The allies held the ground they were driven from in the morning at such frightful cost, and the victory, bloody and sanguinary as it was, was theirs.

The little road which leads through the jungle is literally covered with dead Paraguayans; over two thousand impede the transit. The Belaco estero is dyed with blood of friend and foe. Lopez has fallen back, but not gone into Humaita. Osorio lost two horses; he is no doubt a hero; he was in the very thick of the fight. Netto lost one horse. Colonel Pallejas's son is killed and several other Oriental officers.

—A gentleman, who lives well known in this metropolis, was always complaining to his father-in-law of his wife's temper. At last, papa in-law, becoming very wearied of these endless grumblings, and being a bit of a wag, replied: "Well, my dear fellow, if I hear of her tormenting you any more, I shall disinherit her." The husband never again complained.—Home Journal.

WHEN people read of Theodore Tilton, they probably imagine a grave, gray, severe person, with a face like an open Bible. Our associate saw him last week on the floor of the House of Representatives, and he looked like a College Freshman, with a profusion of brown locks and not enough beard to make a door mat to a bee-hive.

CHARLES ELLIOT NORTON FIELDS, entered the bookstore of W. D. Ticknor & Co., nearly thirty years ago, a poor boy, and got his education from his surroundings in the business. Stevens, and some of the features in the background are horrible, almost as bad as Judge Underwood's."

GEN. CASS' large fortune had its origin in his investment in real estate in what is now the heart of the city of Detroit; and it is stated that the heirs of the deceased statesman may thank the late Mrs. Cass, who died in 1855, for the great wealth they inherit. Repeatedly, when the property was rising in value, years ago, the General was anxious to sell, and was only restrained by the earnest advice and remonstrance of his wife.

THE New York Post punishes a proposition, signed by numerous prominent gentlemen, to present Wm. Lloyd Garrison with $50,000 as a testimonial of the appreciation of his past labors. MADEMOISELLE RACHEL, when giving one of her readings before the Duke of Wellington, was informed that all her audience, except the Duke, were ignorant of the French language She went on however, consoling herself with the idea that the Duke, at least, understood her. After it was all over the Duke approached the great actress, and said, "Mademoiselle, our guests have had a grand advantage over me; they had the happiness of hearing you. I am as deaf as a post."

SAYS a New Orleans correspondent: "I was amused at a theatre in this city not a century ago, by seeing an elderly and celebrated actor, in the midst of a 'high comedy' love scene, have his teeth fall out on the stage. The lady with whom he was playing, with great presence of mind, swept her ample skirts over the dentist work, and he, dropping his handkerchief, stooped and regained them, and, walking jauntily from the footlights, replaced them without having deranged the scene, or attracted the attention of a dozen people in the house."

SIR S. MORTON PETO's new book on America thus sums up with regard to some of the confederate generals: Sherman's antagonists are in the express and railroad business. The once dreaded Beauregard will sell you a ticket from New Orleans to Jackson; and if you want to send a couple of hams to a friend in Richmond, Joe Johnston, once a commander of great armies, will carry them. The man whose works Grant moved upon at Donelson, edits an indifferent newspaper in New Orleans, while the commander of the rebel cavalry at Corinth is his local reporter. Marshall practices law in New Orleans; Forrest is running a sawmill, Dick Taylor is having a good time in New York; Roger A. Pryor is a daily practitioner in the courts.

THE New Orleans Picayune tells the following incident: During the thick of the fight at Resaca, Bishop Polk said, "you look hungry, and must divide my lunch with me." Some one had presented him with a box of guava jelly and a bit of wheat bread (rarities in those Confederate times,) and the prospect was tempting "But," said we, "wouldn't it go a little better if we were in a safer place?" The old gentleman laughed kindly and replied, "Certainly it would." And we proceeded to find one. We had scarcely seated ourselves, however, behind an oak tree at the bottom of a hill, when a shrapnel came tearing through the air, struck the oak broadside about thirty feet above us, and precipitated both, lunch and all, amid a mass of limbs and fragments into a gully below. "Hey-dey!" cried the General picking himself out of the rubbish. "You're a pretty fellow for selecting covers! Come we may as well take ourselves back to the front."

To this Mr. Richmond, in his characteristic liberal manner, replied, through Jerry Haskell, the Receiver at Batavia, that but for the law of the last session against free passes, it would afford him pleasure to give the Press of the State a free train—but under the circumstances, as he could not exactly do that, the editors could have the train on paying the Receiver one dollar! They accepted the offer.

Foreign Gossip.

—There are a variety of good stories told at the London clubs with reference to the late panic, for men will have their jokes even upon serious subjects. A celebrated barrister, who had invested a small sum in Overend & Gurney's Company, met a friend to whom he communicated his loss "Five hundred," said the latter, "that must have quite upset you." "Not at all," replied the wit, "I only lost my balance."

—A Confederate immigrant to Brazil writes back concerning Pedro the Second: "The Emperor was forty years old the 2d of December last, is six feet and a little over in height, stoutly built, easy, graceful, and dignified in his movements, has rather an effeminate voice, is affable, courteous, and agreeable, easy of access, and particularly partial to Americans, and encourages their visits to him, speaking their language fluently.

—The London Sportsman of June 12th, says: "There is, we understand, every chance of Mace and Goss again coming together, as Mace has not only accepted Goss' challenge, but staked £50 to make good a match to fight in six weeks, for either £200 or £500 a side. By our next impression we shall, probably, be in a position to lay the matter more definitely before our readers. At present we can say no more than that it is rumored Goss will cover Mace's money this day."

—The English journals announce the death of Mr. John Macdougall Stewart, the well-known explorer of the interior of Australia. In 1857 he made an effort to explore the range of country west of Lake Torrens, a salt lake or marsh of South Australia. In 1858 he made a second attempt, and succeeded in opening a large tract of country before unknown, and Lake Torrens has now been traced for four hundred miles. For these services the Colonial Legislature of Adelaide rewarded him with a fourteen years' lease of one thousand square miles of land. In 1860 Mr. Stuart successfully effected the journey across the interior of Australia, from south to north. He was an Honorary Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society of London and of Berlin.

—At the wedding of her Royal Highness the Princess Mary, her Majesty the Queen appeared in the deepest black, and her two attendants, the Duchess Dowager of Athole and the Duchess of Wellington, in "mourning so deep indeed, that not even a speck of white relieved its sombreness." The Duchess of Armade—in deference to the cosmopolitan superstition which holds black attire to be inauspicious on such joyful occasions—had laid aside for the happy day the mourning which her Royal Highness is wearing for the more recent bereavement sustained by her family in the person of her royal aunt and mother-in-law, the venerable widow of King Louis Philippe.

—The Paris correspondent of a Texas paper, gives the following account of the personal appearance of Napoleon: "The emperor was out on Sunday last. He came in his carriage-and-four with out-riders, and accompanied by Gen. Fleury and a couple of foreign embassadors. I was quite close to him, and had a good look at him. He is much shorter than I had thought, and inclined to be fleshy, is quite gray, and wears no other beard than a moustache and imperial. He has a large and remarkably fine shaped head and bright eye. He was very plainly clad in a pepper-and-salt citizen's dress, with silk gloves. He returned, in a good-natured, graceful manner, the frequent unostentatious greetings of the passers-by."

—Here is the story of Prince Christian's courtship. Prince Christain is the youth who is to marry the Princess Helena on July 5. Queen Victoria, at the inauguration of a statute to the Prince Consort, saw a gentleman wiping his eyes and looking very much affected, and asked who he was. It proved to be Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein. From that hour the Queen took the almost unknown, unnoticed, and penniless young Prince into favor, and finally bestowed upon him the hand of her daughter. Not, however, without the hearty consent of the young Princess herself, who shares her mother's enthusiastic admiration for the tender hearted Prince, who, like some hero of a fairy tale, won a royal bride by an appropriately dropped tear.

The Prussian Needle Gun.

The "needle-gun" in use in Prussia is a formidable weapon—described by the London Times as a converted Enfield on the Snider system, with improved ammunition devised by the Woolwich Laboratory. This rifle possesses the advantages of being simple, safe, cheap, non-capping, and little liable to get out of order. Moreover, it does not require such a reduction of the stock as to destroy the efficiency of a weapon which for military purposes is required to act as a pike as well as a fire-arm. A portion of the upper side of the breech end of the barrel is cut out for the admission of the cartridge. This vacant place is closed after loading by a lump of steel—the "breech-stopper or "breech piece"—which hinges upon one side of the barrel, and forms a false breech, against the face of which the back end of the cartridge rests; the barrel is, in fact, shortened to this extent. A plunger or piston transmits the blow of the hammer through the stopper to the top or the cartridge, which is withdrawn after firing by a little instrument which forms part of the stopper.

The cartridge is on the "central-fire" system, the chief novelties being the case and bullet. As regards the former, the object has been to provide a case which shall uncoil or unwind to a certain extent on discharge. The bullet is a combination of various constructions, none of them original, but producing together a projectile of a sufficiently distinctive character. It has the general form and appearance of the Enfield rifle bullet, with its hollow base and baked clay plug; it has the cannelures which originally characterized the Tamisier and the Minie bullets; and the wood plug in the head, to which Mr. Metford and Mr. Whitworth may both lay some claim. The cartridge is perfectly impervious to moisture; it is safe, not liable to lead or foul; it admits of about fourteen rounds being fired in a minute; and it shoots from twenty to twenty five per cent. better than the service Enfield ammunition.

Curing a Somnambulist.

A gentleman in this city related to us, a few days since, his method of curing a case of somnambulism in his family.

About a year ago, his little son, a boy of about six years of age, very suddenly took to night walking. He would get up from his bed in the middle of the night, go down stairs, take a cruise about the lower part of the house, and would generally awaken in some fix that would cause a great uproar, and oblige the gentleman to get up, and, after hunting the boy up, get him back to bed again. Every expedient was tried to break the little fellow of the bad habit, but instead of breaking him it increa ed upon him, so that almost every night he was up. These night wanderings told seriously upon his health, and satisfied that something must be done to break the habit, the following plan was pursued:

A pail of water was placed over the door at the foot of the stairs, through which the boy passed, in such a manner that when the door opened he received its contents over his shoulders. These night baths would not be very agreeable, for they would arouse the boy from his sleep, and set him to howling furiously. Every night for a week the little fellow regularly got his bath, and regularly tried it again, but the eighth night the father was aroused, found the boy out in the woodshed as dry as a bone, but the bucket of water spilled as usual. The next night he watched the door, and found that when the boy came down stairs, he had a broom in his hand, and approaching the door carefully, reaching out the handle, and opening the door sufficiently to let the water fall without wetting him, went on. The next night two buckets were placed, and when the boy came down in the same manner as before, opened the door, spilled the water, and went on, it was only to receive the contents of the second bucket plump upon his little shoulders. It was a severe experiment, and gave him a cold which nearly proved fatal, but the result has been most beneficial, and for three months he has been entirely broken of the habit, much to the gratification of his parents and friends.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

VICTOR HUGO'S HOME.—Victor Hugo's home is situated in the most lovely spot that ever landscape painter dreamed of. Placed upon a height, it overlooks the city, the fort, and that immense horizon of the sea where nothing seems to trammel the flight of even genius itself. The house is celebrated in Guernsey, where it excites lively curiosity. Wonders are related of it, enhanced by the mystery overhanging a threshold till now never crossed by the Guernsey world; it is said to contain furniture worthy of an enchanter's palace. The apartments and galleries have been entirely constructed from designs by Victor Hugo; he passed three years in drawing them. The rarest curiosities adorn the interior; for Victor Hugo, who loves to live in the past, has a mania for antique furniture.

.....It won't do to be so devoted to a tender hearted wife as to comply implicitly with her request when she asks you, "Now, tumble over the cradle, and break your neck, my dear, won't you?"

.....It won't do for a man to fancy a lady is in love with him, because she treats him civilly, or that she has virtually engaged herself to him because she has always endured his company.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

CLARKE CHATTEN writes the Prairie Farmer that he has found a remedy for the potato bug. He mixes one gallon of coal oil with a barrel of water and sprinkles it lightly upon the potato vines with a brush or a watering-pot The bug disappears.

PROF COPEMAN says a horse should never be exercised when suffering with spasmodic colic. In the absence of other remedies, he recommends a table-spoonful of pulverized ginger or allspice given in a pint of hot water. The horse should be kept as quiet as possible.

THERE was a Convention of Fruit Housemen held recently in Cincinnati, embracing representatives of the different fruit houses, in different cities, constructed after Nyce's plan. Thirty varieties of apples, many of them entirely out of season, together with several varieties of pears and grapes, were presented in the best condition.

IT is suggested by the experience of a correspondent of an agricultural paper that cub worms may be destroyed and corn saved by making, with a stick an inch or two in diameter, four holes on opposite sides of the hills, into which they crawl and die. It is asserted that crops have been saved by such measure.

EVERY person who toils daily upon a farm in warm weather should be careful to practice a system of ablution at the close of each day's labor. Some times he may be so exhausted as to render this anything but an inviting performance; yet by its omission he loses much of the refreshment which the hours of repose are designed to impart. Cleanliness of person is essential to sound and refreshing slumber, hence the labor of keeping one's person clean, is amply repaid by the elasticity which follows from nightly ablutions, before retiring to rest. These are especially requisite during the haying and harvesting season when profuse perspiration is a certain concomitant of hard and protracted labor. Keep clean and sleep soundly—go to bed unwashed and rise in the morning unrefreshed, with a feeling of lassitude which the exertions of the day will hardly be able to remove.

NO GRAPES IN FEVER AND AGUE DISTRICTS.—In that chapter of George Husmann's excellent work "On the Cultivation of the Native Grape," where he treats of the soil and location for vineyards, he states that "he was much struck by the force of a remark made by a medical friend last summer. when in consequence of the continual rains the ague was very prevalent." It was this: "Wherever you find the ague an habitual guest with the inhabitants you need not look for healthy grape vines." When we recall the fact that the same kind of weather that produces the rust on wheat almost invariably in newly settled sections, brings with it the fever and ague, and that an unusual excess, or that peculiar wet and hot weather last August and early September, ruined nearly one half of all our Delawares in this State and badly mildewed the leaf of all our native vines, with, perhaps, the exception of the Concord, Northern Muscadine, and Blood's Black, we shall see there is much pertinency in the remark.

That an offensive war against weeds is five times less expensive than a defensive one.

That good fences always pay better than lawsuits with neighbors.

That hay is a great deal cheaper made in the summer than purchased in winter.

That a horse which lays his ears back and looks lightning when any one approaches him, is vicious. Don't buy him.

That scrimping the feed of fattening hogs is a waste of grain.

That over-fed fowls won't lay eggs.

That one evening spent at home in study is more profitable than ten in lounging about country taverns.

That cows should always be milked regularly and clean.

That it is the duty of every man to take some good, reliable, entertaining paper, and pay for it regularly—of course.

MAKING PICKLES.—Different methods are practiced in making pickles. The most common one is to make a brine, and put the cucumbers in it; and keep adding to the quantity as you pick from the vines. You may continue this process for weeks, till the cask or barrel is full. By adding salt to the brine, you may keep the cucumbers sound and good for months. These brined cucumbers can, at your convenience be converted into pickles, by taking a larger or smaller quantity of them, and putting them into vinegar. In a short time they will be fit for use. As you pick the cucumbers from one day to another, you must see that the brine is strong enough. A quart of salt to a gallon of water is in proper proportion. But a great trouble is experienced with pickles in brine, from the formation of a thick scum on the surface. To remove this, put a piece of cloth over the brine, and a board cover on this. When you add fresh cucumbers to the barrel, carefully lift up the cloth and the scum adhering to it; wash it and replace it. Repeat this operation as often as necessary.

Another method for making pickles is, to put the cucumbers in a barrel and sprinkle freely with fine salt. The moisture within dissolves the salt and thus a strong brine is formed. The fruit itself will shrivel, but the plumpness will be restored as soon as it is put into vinegar. When you have large quantities of cucumbers, you may fill barrels with them, add half a peck of salt to each, head them, and fill them with water through the bungs, and then close the bung holes tight. Pickles thus prepared, it is said, keep in good condition for a few weeks, till sold, and the purchaser then manages them in his own way.—Exchange.

A NEW DISINFECTANT.—A communication has been received at the Department of State from our legation at London, inclosing two pamphlets relating to experiments by Dr. James Dewon of Kirkcaldy, for testing the efficiency of suphurous acid gas as a disinfectant. Results are cited which lead to the conviction that rinderpest, pleuropneumonia, and cholera, and some other diseases by which the human family are afflicted may be not only much modified but even wholly prevented by this means. The method of generating the gas is very simple and inexpensive. It is only necessary to have a chaffer of old ash cinders, get a small crucible into them, and drop a piece of sulphur stick, of the size of a man's thumb, into it. This will fumigate a large cattle shed in twenty minutes. The animals seem to enjoy it, and it acts as a tonic on man or beast. The shed must be well ventilated during the fumigation, as well as before and after it, and sound sanitary rules must be enforced in regard to cleanliness and the removal of dung during the prevalence of such epidemics as are above named. The fumigation may be made, according to the foregoing directions, four or five times a day. Not only is this treatment said to cure the fatal diseases, but it is stated that mange, ring-worm and lice have also vanished before it, and that grease heels in horses have also been cured by it, while severe cases of phthisic and tubucular affections of the lungs have been relieved in human beings. The matter is worthy of study and experiment by our scientific and professional men.

The Crosby Opera House Art Association, Chicago.

THIS Association will, on the 1st of October next, award three hundred and twe premiums to its members—the first being the well known Crosby Opera House, (erected at a cost of $600,000) and the lot on which it stands. This building has a frontage of 140 by 180 feet, and is one of the finest specimens of architecture in America. It now yields from its offices, stores and rooms, a yearly rental (exclusive of the Opera House proper) of $30,000. This grand Temple of Art, together with all its superb stage scenery, furniture, fixtures and accessories, will be deeded in fee to the drawer of the first premium, subject only to existing leases, the rents to accrue to the person to whom the property shall be awarded on the day of the drawing.

The remaintng premiums consist of three hundred beautiful oil paintings, ranging in value from $1,000 to $20,000—the production of the most eminent artists in America. Also, the original life-size bust of Lincoln, in marble (by Volk,) worth $2,000. These costly works of art are now on exhibition at the Crosby Art Gallery, Chicago, and at the Art Institute, New York, members of the Association being admitted to either place free of charge.

The price of shares is $5 each, but every certificate is accompanied with an exquisite steel engraving worth that sum at the publishers' price; and where more certificates than one are taken, engravings (artists' proofs, etc.,) are given to the purchaser, corresponding in value to the amount subscribed.

The following letter is an evidence of the deep interest taken by the Chicago public in the success of the enterprise, and of the warm approval of the plan by gentlemen of high commercial and personal standing:

CHICAGO, Illinois, June 1, 1866.

U. H. CROSBY, ESQ.:

DEAR SIR—We have been pleased to learn that you have decided to adopt the "Art Union" principle in the disposition of your Opera House.

While we should be glad to know of your success in the enterprise under any circumstances, it would add greatly to our gratification to reflect that, in accomplishing your own wishes, you had given additional impetus to the development of æsthetic taste amongst us. That this would be only the natural result of the distribution, as proposed, of a large number of first-class paintings and engravings, we have no doubt and we congratulate the public upon this fact, as well as the no less important one that they possess in your own well-established integrity, satisfactory guarantee that the enterprise will be fairly and honorably conducted.

With every wish that you may succeed, we are, dear sir, yours very truly,

U. H. CROSBY, ESQ., Chicago, Illinois:

DEAR SIR—We the undersigned artists, of New York, Philadelphia and Boston, learning of your misfortune, and the generous desire of your fellow citizens of Chicago, and others, to assist you in re-establishing yourself through the success of the "Crosby Opera House Art Association," take pleasure in assuring you of our hearty good will and co-operation, wishing you all success and continuance in well doing, in bringing art so advantageously and generously before our whole people:

The high character of Mr. Crosby and all interested with him in this Art Union scheme, forbids even the slightest suspicion of anything like bad faith or lack of integrity either in the management or final consummation of this great enterprise. The citizens of Chicago heartily respond to the plan, the press and people everywhere endorse it, and the most convincing proof of public confidence is furnished by the rapidity with which large subscriptions are now pouring in upon the Association from all parts of the country.

All orders for certificates, and communications should be addressed to U. H. Crosby, Actuary A. A., No. 28 Crosby's Opera House, Chicago, or to No. 625 Broadway, New York.

BRIGHAM YOUNG, in a recent speech at Salt Lake City, said: "If they undertook to try him in a Gentile court he would see the government in hell first, and was ready to fight the government the rub. He had soldiers, and rifles, and pistols, and ammunition, and plenty of it, and cannon, too, and would use them. He was on it. The governor of the territory was useless, and could do nothing. He was the real governor of this people, and by the power of the Most High he would be forever and ever. If the Gentiles didn't like this, they could leave and go to hell."

THE REAL VELPAU FEMALE PILL.

[WARRANTED FRENCH.]

THESE PILLS, so celebrated many years ago in Paris for the relief of female irregularities, and afterward so notorious for their criminal employment in the practice of abortion, are now offered for sale for the first time in America. They have been kept in comparative obscurity from the fact that the originator, Dr. Velpau, is a physician in Paris of great wealth and strict conscientious principles, and has withheld them from general use, lest they should be employed for unlawful purposes. In overcoming Female Obstructions, Falling of the Womb, Whites, Green Sickness, Suppression, Retention, or Immoderate Flow of the Monthly Discharges, they seem to be truly omnipotent, bursting open the flood-gates from whatever cause may have stopped them; but they are offered to the public only for legitimate uses, and all agents are forbidden to sell them when it is understood that the object is unlawful. Married ladies should never take them when there is any reason to believe themselves pregnant, for they will be sure to produce a miscarriage.

These pills are entirely safe under all circumstances, being composed entirely of substances from the vegetable kingdom.

Each box has the coat of arms for the City of Paris stamped on the box, with the words "Trade Mark" in French, to counterfeit which is a misdemeanor, and all persons will be dealt with according to law.

☞ Full directions accompany every box.

Ladies can obtain a box sealed from the eyes of the curious, by inclosing One Dollar and six post-office stamps to any respectable druggists, or to O. G. STAPLES, General Agent for the United States, Watertown, N. Y.

MELODEONS,

Every Instrument Warranted for

FIVE YEARS.

I have all the facilities for manufacturing these superior Melodeons, including steam power and machinery (every department being under my personal supervision,) and I feel confident, with my unsurpassed improvements, that I am now placing before the public a superior instrument, larger and with the evenness of tone not heretofore obtained by any other Melodeon manufacturer. The finish and durability of these instruments are second to none. With my unsurpassed facilities I hope to continue to furnish these Melodeons at much less than Eastern prices. All orders will receive as prompt attention as if parties were here to select. Factory, at 145 and 148 Summit street.

Now let me give you reasons why it will be to your advantage to buy of me. In the first place you will have a large assortment to select from, comprised of the BEST made in the country. Again, you have your Piano or Melodeon put up in your house, in good condition without further trouble. And in the third place you will buy cheap, and get a good, reliable instrument. A great many Pianos are spoiled by getting out of order in moving, and there being no person to put them properly in order, they are used in that condition and materially injured.

I buy my Pianos at the LOWEST CASH PRICES, and my sales being large, I do not require a great profit on each one. I now ask you to consider these facts, and should you want a Piano, Melodeon or Organ, write me giving name and place of residence, and if we do not agree in price, terms, &c., it shall not be my fault.

Instruments securely packed to go any distance free of charge.

A GOOD REPORT.—During the last eight weeks of the past term, the following Pupils of Tecumseh West Branch School, stood 10 in deportment:

Mary Blinn; Eva Campbell; Mary E. Ford; Nancy Kile; Julia G. Lilly; Mary McKinney; Jennie McCowen; Allie McCowen; Kate Yawger.

☞ Remember that Merritt, Meeker & Co. have a large and well selected assortment of Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings, which they are selling for cash, at prices that defy competition.

☞ Coming—J. Robinsons Show—But that which creates the greatest excitement among the people is the constant arrival of Summer Goods at the Cheap Store of Anderson & Larned.

☞ The best—The Cheapest, in Southern Michigan—Anderson & Larneds new assortment of Bleeched and Brown Sheetings and Shirtings.

☞ "Thunderation!" no madam; I never deal in it—poor article to wear! too flashy! does not last long.

☞ G. Pujols has opened an Eating House at the Adrian Depot. It is just the thing that has been needed for the travelling public.

☞ M. S. Every of Bridgewater, has just received a patent for an improved Sheep Feeding Rack, which is decidedly a grand improvement on the old way of feeding sheep.

☞ Merritt, Meeker & Co. have a large assortment of those splendid Cassimeres manufactured by the Ypsilanti Woolen Manufacturing Co.

Do not fail to examine them before purchasing elsewhere.

☞ Gold—going up—But this makes no difference in the price of Clothes and Cassimeres at Anderson & Larned's as their stock was bought when Gold was $1,25. This fact accounts for the rush which we have noticed there the past week.

TRAPS.—A great variety of "small traps" and a mammoth pile of larger traps—every thing in the line of Dry Goods, at the fashionable store of R. C. Moore.

New Paper.

Tecumseh is to be honored with another weekly newspaper. P. W. Adams has made all the preliminary arrangements and has already started for Chicago, to procure the material for starting a new paper. It is to be called the Raisin Valley Record. We welcome Mr. Adams into the field of Journalism, and wish him abundant success in his new enterprize.

☞ The public entertainment given by the Good Templars in their Hall on Friday evening last was well attended and gave the best of satisfaction. The lodge is now in a flourishing condition and rapidly increasing in numbers and influence. We think public exhibitions of this kind occasionally would add much to the interest of their meetings.

Laying the Corner Stone.

The Exercises at the laying of the corner stone of the new Presbyterian Church which took place last Monday, passed off very pleasantly. A threatening shower which arose just before the time for the ceremony probably kept many away, although as it was, there were a large number in attendance.

The following order of exercises was observed:

1st. Anthem by the Choir.
2d. Reading of the scriptures by Rev. Mr. Webb of Adrian.
3d. Prayer—by the Rev. Mr. Wastell.
4th. Historical paper—by the pastor.
5th. Singing original hymn.
6th. Laying of the Corner Stone.
7th. Address—by Rev. G. P. Tindall of Ypsilanti.
8th. Doxology.
9th. Benediction—by the Rev. Mr. Skillman of Macon.

CONTENTS OF THE BOX.

1st. Bible and Hymn Book.
2d Confession of Faith and names of Pastor, Elders and members of the Church.
3d. Copy of Historical paper.
4th. Names of officers and members of Sabbath School.
5th. Names of Soldiers who enlisted during the war, from the Church.
6th. Names of the Trustees—Building Committee—Contractors and Master Builders.

10th. The original letter of Rev. Mr. Darwin to Gen. Brown, dated April 26, 1827.

The Hot Weather.

Were we to follow the fashion, we should have a powerful local in this weeks issue upon the extreme heat of the last few days, but we are in the condition of the man, who had his load of apples roll out the backward of the wagon box while going up a long hill. He was very much addicted to swearing, but when he saw his apples strung along the hill, he stopped short and said never a word, because he said, it would be useless to swear as he could not do justice to the subject. We feel that we cannot do justice to the subject and hence refrain from all comments.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.—We are in receipt of the monthly report of the Department of Agriculture, from which we learn some facts of interest relative to the growing crops. From a careful examination of statistical returns, the prospect is that there will be three-fourths of an average total yield of wheat. Commissioner Newton is of opinion that the yield of oats in Michigan will be nine-tenths a usual crop, and that the other crops promise almost, if not quite, an average yield.

NO ASSIGNMENT OF PENSIONS ALLOWED.—The act of June 6th makes several important changes in the Pension Law. One such is that every assignment sale, pledge or mortgage of a pension claim shall be utterly void. If any person other than the party pensioned shall receive any moneys on account of pension, he shall make affidavit that he has no interest whatever in the moneys, and if he swears falsely in that respect, he may be punished for perjury.

EUROPE.—From across the stormy Atlantic come ominous sounds of bloodshed, pestilence and death. The thrones of the old world are trembling to their very foundations, and we may yet see new dynasties rise on the ashes of the old, rotten and corrupt monarchies which now hold sway. In the midst of all those thickening complications it is gratifying to know that Geo. Heesen is at peace with all mankind and enjoying an uninterrupted tide of prosperity in the Clothing business. The attention of our readers is invited to his large stock which he is selling at very low prices.

The State Fair.

The citizens of Adrian having acceded to terms proposed by the State Agricultural Society, the eighteenth annual exhibition will be held this year at the Springbrook Park, at Adrian, where it was held so successfully last year. The business committee have made arrangements to give exhibitors increased facilities, by enlarging and extending the buildings, and by the adoption of several other improvements, which will add very much to the completeness of the Fair and to the convenience of visitors. Last year Floral Hall was crowded so that many exhibitors could not display their instruments, and some articles that came late were never taken out of their cases. A large and commodious wing is to be added to this building. The Hall for the exhibition of fruit is to be entirely reconstructed and enlarged. The premiums offered for the display of fruits are believed to be the largest that has ever been offered in the United States. In addition to the usual lists, which are greatly increased in value there has been added this year a new class, entitled "District Collections." In this class a premium of one hundred dollars is offered for the best collection of Fruit from any one Congressional District, exhibited by any individual. The fruit is required to be actually grown and gathered within the limits of the District from which it is entered, but the collection is not required to be grown by any one person. It may be gathered and selected from any and every orchard in the region embraced by the Congressional District, and includes every variety of fruit. The design of the Society is to bring out as large and complete an exhibition of the fruits of the State as possible, and that this important interest may derive as great a benefit as can be obtained by a more thorough knowledge of the productions of the orchards of the State There are three premiums of this kind offered, the first premium of $100, the second of $50, and the third of $25. These premiums will not be awarded to any one district, as the conditions on which they are offered state that each premium shall be awarded to separate districts. These premiums and the premiums for ordinary collection should call out an extraordinary display of fruit, as this year promises to be very favorable for the growth of many of our best varieties.

Base Ball.

Last Saturday the 14th inst. was the day set for a match game of Base Ball between the 1st National Club of Tecumseh and the Ridgeway Club. Our Club started down, together with a number of spectators, 13 in all—in Charley Bidwell's four horse rig, and were traveling along finely, until they got just this side of Daniel Warings, when one of the bolts fastening the tongue to the axletree, came out and the wagon ran into the ditch while the team became frightened and ran. One of the horses soon fell, and they were then stopped. The wagon, however was badly broken and James Moore was slightly hurt. Daniel Waring kindly lent the boys a wagon and they passed the rest of their journey without any mishap. They found the Ridgeway Club in readiness to receive them and a very interesting game was played. Cornelius L. Waring acted as Scorer for Ridgeway, Charles Slayton as Scorer for the 1st National, and Jay Sartus as Umpire.

The score was as follows:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Nat'l.	9	9	9	4	3	9	2	10	8
Ridg'y.	6	0	2	5	4	1	5	7	1

Total, Nat'l. 75. Ridg'y. 31.

At the conclusion of the game the Ridgewey Club gave three cheers for the Tecumseh boys and the Tecumseh Club returned the compliment. This match game will probably be followed by many others during the summer.

Coe's Dyspepsia Cure is a sovereign remedy; why do not you who are suffering, make the experiment of the trial of a single bottle; it costs but a trifle to taste it, and will surely bring you relief.

Loss by Portland Fire. July 4.

The total amount covered by Ætna Policies on property destroyed or damaged is $200,854, on which salvage will be about 5 per cent. Our total loss will not vary much from $200,000, and is being promptly adjusted and paid. This sum is 5 per cent. upon the assets, a figure but slightly exceeding our government and State taxes paid last year, or a proportion equal to a $5000 loss for a company of $100,000 assets.

The necessity for insurance and the value of wealthy strong corporations, is forcibly illustrated by this fire. Several weak Insurance Company are destroyed.—Portland has a population of 35,0000;—was handsomely built, mostly fine brick or stone structures—protected and screened with upwards of 3'000 shade tress—bounded on three sides by water—indeed, literally, almost rising from the ocean—and with a steam fire department—yet it has $10,000,000 worth of property consumed in a few hours—upon a holiday when its people are least occupied—from the very insignificant cause of a contemptible fire cracker.

Remember the trifling origin of fires that sweep away in a few hours the earnings of years. consider your best interests and give the Ætna agent a call if you need proper Insurance security. Policies issued at fair terms. Apply to

Miscellany.

IF YOU SHOULD E'ER GET MARRIED.

If you should e'er get married, John,
I'll t-ll you what to do—
Get a little tenement,
Just big enough for two!
And one spare room for company,
And one spare bed within it—
And if you'd begin love's life aright,
You'd better thus begin it.

In furniture be moderate, John,
And let the stuffed chairs wait;
One looking glass will do for both
Yourself and loving mate;
And Brussels, too, and other things,
Which make a fine appearance,
If you can better afford it, they
Will better look a year hence.

Some think they must have pictures, John,
Superb and costly, too;
Your wife will be a picture, John,
Let that suffice for you.
Remember now the wise man said,
A tent and love within it,
Is better than a splendid house,
With bickerings every minute.

And one word as to cooking, John—
Your wife can do that best;
For love, to make the biscuit rise,
Is better far than yeast.
No matter if each day you don't Bring turkey to the table,
'Twill better relish by-and-by,
When you are better able.

For all you buy pay money, John,
Money that every day—
If you would have your life run smooth,
There is no better way.
A note to pay is an ugly thing,
(If thing you choose to call it.)
When it hangs o'er a man who has
No money in his wallet.

And now when you are married, John,
Don't try to ape the rich;
It took me many a toilsome year,
To gain their envied niche.
And if you'd gain the summit, John,
Look well to your beginning,
And then will all you win repay
The care and toil of winning.

Gymnastics in the Clouds.

On the afternoon of the Fourth Mons. Auguste Buislay, of the gymnastic troupe, whose elegant and graceful execution of the most difficult gymnastic feats at the new Bowery theatre have been attracting large and enthusiastic audience for the past two weeks was advertised to make a balloon ascension from Elm park. Not only was he to ascend skyward, but during his rise and progress he was to execute upon a trapeze pendent from the balloon, some of the most difficult feats pertaining to his profession. The ascent was made, and the feats performed in accordance with the programme, but a denouement was provided not set down in the bills, which came near costing the daring aeronaut his life. His balloon, which is of genus Montgolfier differs from those we are accustomed to seeing somewhat in the manner of its construction, but especially in the manner in which it is filled. It is constructed of water-proof material, chemically prepared, and is arranged with parachutes at the point of its greatest bulge, which are closed during the ascent, but expanded when the gas is allowed to escape, and so retard the machine in its descent, bringing it to the ground with a light and easy motion. The balloon is 80 feet in circumference, and is filled with rarified air, made by burning straw, and other light, inflammable substances beneath it. When filled and loosened from its bonds it springs into the air like a shot from a gun, and, in the winking of an eye, is hundreds of feet in the air, carrying with it whatever is brave or foolhardy enough to accompany it in its heavenward flight. Below this ball of rarified air hangs the trapeze on which the gymnast performs his wonderful feats. This is simply the ordinary two pieces of pendant rope, supporting a wooden bar, similar to the apparatus to be found in every circus and every gymnasium.

On the afternoon of the Fourth the Montgolfier was duly filled in the presence of a large crowd at Elm Park, and notwithstanding the threatening storm and the counseling of his friends, the intrepid Frenchman resolved to carry out to the letter his announcements. Accordingly a little before 5 o'clock, he mounted the trapeze, and, giving the word to cut the balloon loose, was speedily flying upward with great velocity. From the moment of leaving terra firma the gymnast could be seen executing his perilous feats upon the slender bar—feats of agility, strength and dexterity which usually make an audience shiver with fright when performed within a few feet of the ground. As long as the eye could see him, he continued gyrating and poising upon his dangerous perch, and it was almost a relief when he disappeared from view, and his perilous situation no longer made itself felt to those who witnessed the start.

The balloon ascended to a height of about 7,000, drifting gradually to the Jersey shore. At this height, only about two-thirds of the altitude usually obtained, the balloon became stationary for a few moments, and then began to descend. This was owing to the dampness in the atmosphere—a severe rain storm then prevailing, which served to render dense the hot air with which the balloon was inflated, and finally to render inoperative its sustaining qualities. The machine began to descend gradually, acquiring increased velocity with each foot of space it traversed, until it finally began to descend as a lump of lead, retarded only in its downward course by the parachutes attached to it. It soon became apparent to Monsieur Buislay that he had lost all control of his apparatus, and that he must look to his individual safety when nearing the earth again. Most fortunately for him, the storm was driving him over the Hudson river in a northerly direction. Fearing the balloon would strike the water and entangle him in its meshes, he, when 60 feet in the air, sprang from the trapeze, cleaving the air like a rocket in his descent, and, striking the water feet foremost, disappeared beneath the surface.

This involuntary bath was taken near the Jersey shore, and was witnessed by several persons who were sailing near the spot. Some of these hastened towards the place, but others, less human, proceeded on their way, apparently not caring for the life of a human being. Young Buislay, on coming to the surface after his first plunge, being a fine swimmer as well as gymnast, struck out manfully for the New York shore. The wind and the tide proved almost too much for him, however, and had not Mr. Kaitor, of the Claremont garden, reached him as soon as he did, he must have been drowned. Mr. Kaitor on first seeing the difficulty in which the balloonist was placed, hastened to launch his boat and be ready to render such assistance as might be required. When he reached young Buislay that gentleman was nearly exhausted, by his efforts at both flying and swimming. He was taken to the shore where a few drops of the stimulating beverage served to restore him to his acrobatic self. Efforts were at once made to secure the unruly balloon, which had meantime quietly descended into river, and the monster was finally landed, wet and obstinate, but uninjured.—New York Times, July 9th.

ORIDGEINAL POETRY.

Lines on the deth ov Mr. Sniggins.

BI HIS WIDDER.

They laid him low, they laid him low,
He's dead, he's dead and buried;
I'm full—of woe, I'm full—of woe;
Ah! I'm no longer married.

He never jawed, he never jawed,
He was—was not unkind;
He never jawed, my wood he sawed,
Such men you seldom find.

I'm all alone, I'm all alone,
On earth I cannot tarry;
I moan & moan; I'll turn to stone
Right soon unless I marry.

You "wish you were a bird!"
Pra , don't be so absurd,
A girl of your size and age
Wouldn't like to be in a cage,
And fed on canary seed—
A fine bird you'd make, indeed;
How would you like to be Obliged to live in a tree,
Holding on by your feet,
With flies and worms to eat?
I'm sure you'd get no rest,
Tucked up in a nasty nest.
You'd never have new things,
But be always dressed in wings;
Out in all sorts of weathers,
And not even a change of feathers.
How would you manage to speak,
With such a ridiculous beak?
Or to eat without racking your neck,
Bobbing up and down for a peck?
And as for wanting to fly
Round about in the sky,
Rubbish! tis all my eye!
Do leave off being absurd.
And wishing to be a bird.

—A Mormon reached Deseret recently who had footed the entire distance from New York.

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK.

General Intelligence.

Another member of the Cabinet, Attorney General Speed, has sent in his resignation.

The present pension list of the United States is sixteen millions of dollars per annum, and will be increased to twenty-two millions.

It is stated authoritatively, that Postmaster General Dennison has tendered his resignation to the President and that it will be probably accepted.

Mr. Sumner has presented to Congress a petition of the Presidents of insurance companies for the passage of a law prohibiting the importation of India fire-crackers.

A project is before Congress for tunneling the Mississippi at St. Louis, instead of bridging it—the work to be done in three years, at a cost not to exceed $3,000,000.

It is uncertain at what time Congress will adjourn. A proposition for adjournment on the 23d is talked about, but Speaker Colfax thinks it cannot be effected before the 30th.

The bill to extend the Capitol grounds, which has passed the Senate, proposes that the grounds shall embrace forty-one acres. The estimated cost of the additional grounds was, in 1861, about $290,000.

A call has been issued for a convention of Southern Unionists, to be held in Philadelphia on the first Monday in September. The call is signed by many of the most prominent loyalists of the Southern States.

There has been a reduction of about $13,500,000 in the national debt during the month of June. The reduction of the principal of the debt during the year ending July 1st has been over $100,000,000. This is encouraging.

At the Cabinet meeting, on the 10th, it is said that Secretary Harlan took a decided stand in favor of the Freedmen's Bureau bill, and was partly backed by Mr. Seward on the score of expediency. Mr. Seward is said to be indifferent to its merits, but fears the effect of so many vetoes.

Postmaster General Dennison has resigned his place in the Cabinet, not being able to agree with the President in some of his points of policy. It is generally conceded that ex-Governor A. W. Randall, of Wisconsin, now First Assistant Postmaster General, will succeed him.

The heads of the various bureaus in the Treasury Department have been in conference yesterday with the Congressional Committee to whom was referred the petition for increase of salary. The result is the drafting of a bill making an average increase of twenty-five per cent.

The letter of Secretary Welles to Senator Doolittle begins thus: "I cordially approve the movement which has been instituted to sustain the Administration in maintaining unbroken the Union of the States, and I recognize in the call which you have sent me, the principles and views with which the Administration has been governed."

Specials from Washington state that the President and Secretary Seward have signified their intention to be present at the laying of the corner stone of the Douglas monument, as soon as Congress adjourns. Mr. Seward will deliver the eulogy. While in the West, the President and Mr. Seward are expected to visit Madison, Wisconsin, and possibly one or two other Western cities.

Foreign News.

A Porto Rico letter says the slave population is rapidly diminishing by manumission. The sugar and coffee crops are not more than half the average.

A steamer from France reports the rebel General John C. Breckinridge as holding a commission in the Austrian army as Major General. Quite a number of ex-Confederates are among the European armies.

The siege of Tampico by the Liberals progresses favorably. Maximilian has been obliged to resort to extreme measures in order to raise an amount of money sufficient to pay one half the interest on the English debt.

The New York Herald's Madrid correspondent furnishes particulars of the recent revolt in that city. A five hours' fight took place between the insurgent troops and the Queen's soldiers, in which the latter were finally victorious. One thousand of the rebels were killed and wounded, and the royal troops experienced a heavy loss. The cry of the revolutionists was, "Long live the Republic"

The Idea Liberale, of Peubla, of June 9th, shows that letters from the United States are required to be opened and read at the post-office, by the person to whom they are addressed, in the presence of Maximilian's agents, who afterwards examine them. Matters considered objectionable are to be sent to the Imperial Commissary, who submits them to the court-martial for such determination as may be thought proper.

A Paris letter says that the Prussian Government, even in the early stages of the war, is undergoing an electoral defeat, yet Bismark is determined not to let this matter interfere with the military designs of the nation, and has therefore made a bold move, though Victor Emmanuel, in the direction of French intervention. Napoleon is reported as being far from the least willing party in such an arrangement.

The latest advices from Mexico state that Maximilian is far from preparing to evacuate his dominions, and that, on the contrary, he has ordered a conscription in the Empire, to take place on the 15th of July, which, with the aid of 500,000 francs per month from France, will keep him a while longer. Desertions from the Imperial to the Liberal army were frequent. The idea of annexation the United States was widely spread in the Liberal ranks.

Another revolt has broken out in the island of Cuba, and this time it is feared the insurrection will become general. A considerable portion of the inhabitants have declared for a separation from the Spanish Government. A body of the insurgents had been attacked by the Government troops, and during the fight the Colonel of the latter was killed, after which more than one half the Spanish soldiery engaged went over to the rebels. The Cuban authorities were much excited over the report that two thousand Chilian troops had landed near Nuevitas, and also that the discontented natives were to join them.

European dates to the 27th state that the British Ministry had resigned, in consequence of the hostile vote in the House of Commons, and their resignation accepted. An engagement, slight in its nature, had taken place in Austrian Silesia, between the Prussians and Austrians, in which the former had somewhat the advantage..... The Hanoverian army have reached the territory of Meiningen, having eluded the Prussian force by which it was almost surrounded.....A desperate battle occurred on Sunday June 24th, between the Italian and Austrian forces in front of Verona. Victor Emanuel commanded his troops in person, and brought into the contest the three corps of the Army of the Mincio, and the reserve. The Austrians claim to have taken several cannon and $2,000 prisoners, carried Custozza by storm, and repulsed every attack of the Italians. In another engagement the Italians were repulsed, and forced to recross the Mincio.

Dates to the 29th, by the City of London, state that a battle took place between the Austrian and Prussian forces in Bohemia, in the vicinity of Prague, in which the latter were beaten, leaving their dead and wounded on the field.....Another engagement is reported near Turnau, in which the Prussians were successful, but an Austrian letter from Darmstadt says the Prussians are awful liars, and no dependence is to be placed upon any accounts sent from their telegraph bureaus.....The Italians deny that they were beaten at Custozza.....The King of Italy has requested the assistance of France against Austria, for which he offers Sardinia, and important concessions on the Roman question.....A very remarkable and suspicious activity is noticed in the military establishment of France.

European news to the 30th brings intelligence that Lord Derby was about to attempt the formation of a coalition Ministry. The British Government has issued a proclamation of neutrality. Another battle occurred in Bohemia, between the Austrians and Prussians, in which the former are reported to have been driven back with heavy loss. It is officially announced that the Prussians, after their recent defeat in Silesia, desired the Austrian commander to grant a truce, which request was refused.

Southern News.

The Arkansas river has cut through South Bend, 85 miles above its mouth. This save 70 miles of travel.

The Odd Fellows' Hall in New Orleans, a most magnificent structure, was burned on the 4th inst. Loss, $300,000. Insurance only $95,000.

The Radicals at New Orleans will have a meeting next week to appoint delegates to a Southern Congress, to be held in Philadelphia, called by Gov. Hamilton.

The Tennessee Senate has ratified the constitutional amendment, but the House still lacks four of a quorum, and the Sergeant-at-Arms is in pursuit of absentees.

Gen. Grant has selected Gen. Slocum to succeed Gen. Hancock in command at Baltimore. Secretary Stanton does not approve this selection, and thus the difference is not yet settled.

A quarrel occurred at Knoxville on the 13th between a son of Governor Brownlow and another editor, in which young Brownlow is said to have been worsted. He armed himself with a revolver, and avowed his intention to shoot his opponent on sight.

A large money chest, deposited for safe keeping in the office of the Postmaster, at Nashville, was robbed by a soldier of the 6th Regulars of $80,000. The soldier was on duty as a sentry before the door, and after committing the robbery, put on citizens' clothes and eloped.

The Savannah Herald of July 2d says that a freedman, arrested at Macon for the murder of a woman in Wilkinson county, was brought back to the scene of the outrage, and after the mutilation of portions of his body, he was bound to a tree, surrounded by faggots and burned.

Justice Road, of Opelousas, La., has been arrested and sent to New Orleans for refusal to excute the civil rights bill. Parties stand ready to give 200,000 bail for him, and pledge themselves to spend $25,000 for his defence. On the other hand, the United States authorities seem quite determined to make an example of him and punish to the full extent of the law.

Two swindlers, named Ellis and Sanford, representing themselves as agents for Blind Tom, announced a great musical entertainment and lottery scheme, to take place at Wheeling, July 11. Several thousand dollars worth of tickets were sold, and a large audience gathered at the hall on the appointed evening, when it was ascertained that Blind Tom had not arrived, and that the rogues had decamped with the money to parts unknown.

The Freedmen's Bureau Commissioner for North Carolina reports that of the 360,000 blacks in the State, 3,294 are receiving rations. A decrease of 4,787 rations is reported since the month of May; value, $6,234.92 One hundred and nineteen freedmen schools are now in operation, with 135 teachers. The attendance averages 9,084 pupils. One thousand one hundred and forty-six cases were treated in hospital in June, 88 being small pox. As the Legislature and Convention have placed both white and black alike before the courts, the Commissioner deems it advisable to turn over to the civil authority all cases except those of claims by freedmen for wages for labor performed. Destitution and suffering among both whites and blacks in various portions of the State are being gradually relieved.

Western Matters.

The next state fair for Wisconsin will be held at Janesville, in September.

Chung Wan, the first Chinaman ever executed in San Francisco, was hung on the 6th, for murder.

The Hon. Scuyler Colfax was re-nominated for Congress on the 10th, by the Unionists of the 9th District of Indiana.

A fight between Sioux and Chippewas took place at Fort Garry on the 22d ult. The former had six killed and many wounded.

The Democratic State Committee of Illinois have called a convention to meet at Springfield on the 29th of August next for the purpose of nominating a State ticket.

The Nebraska Legislature, in joint ballot, on the 11th, elected Major General John M. Thayer and F. W. Tipton to the U. S. Senate—both Republicans. The Legislature has adjourned sine die.

On Tuesday, the 10th, No. 1 regular spring wheat brought in Chicago $1.88@1.90. The next day it sold as low as $1.60, making a decline in one day, between extremes, of thirty cents, per bushel. It closed on the 11th, however, at $1 65.

The Academy of Music building at Cincinnati, occupied by Kelly & Leon, was burned at eleven o'clock on the night of the 12th, just after the audience had left. The fire was caused by the janitor dropping a coal oil lamp. Loss, $25,000; insurance unknown.

A special from Leavenworth, Kansas, says: "The Indian council at Fort Laramie has broken up. It was a complete farce, the Indians refusing to make peace upon their own terms, to wit: The withdrawal of all troops and travel from their hunting grounds north of the Platte. The council has been an enormous expense to the Government, with no beneficial results."

The Fort Kearney Postmaster writes on the 29th ult. that the mail bag from Omaha, containing mail matter for that place and the Western Territories, was accidently lost while crossing the Platte River. To keep the mail from getting wet, the carrier put it upon the seat of the wagon, from which place the jolting of the wagon in the quicksand gradually worked it off into the river.

According to a Leavenworth dispatch there is every reason to believe that the Indians recently attending the unsuccessful peace conference at Fort Laramie have taken the war path, and unless troops are promptly despatched to the region lying between Kansas and Platte, much trouble may be expected. The Indians are said to number ten thousand, and are reported to be well armed and bountifully supplied with ammunition.

Eastern Matters.

Four ship loads of Mormons arrived at New York during the past month, and five more vessels with similar loads are now on their way.

Prof. Lowe and another person made an ascension with his balloon from New York on the 8th, and reports from Cleveland say the balloon was seen passing that point on Sunday night, apparently without any passengers.

A passenger train on the Atlantic and Great Western railway ran off the track twenty miles east of Meadville, on Monday, and three or four cars were smashed. The fireman was killed and a large number of persons were injured.

In the late fire at Portland safes of nearly all descriptions proved worthless in most cases, when unprotected, and the few which did not fail were probably saved by circumstances. It is judged from this that vaults only, built from the ground, are entirely reliable.

A messenger boy in New York, on the 9th, had a bag containing $2,100 snatched from his hand, while standing in the cashier's office in the Custom House. The thief escaped, the boy falling senseless, probably from chloroform, while endeavoring to pursue him.

Jas. Stephens was arrested at Boston on the 11th, at the suit of P. A. Sennott, who claims $4,000 for delivering lectures on Fenianism and expenses incurred in the excursion to Campo Bello. Stephens appeared in the municipal court, and gave bail in $7,000.

The factory known as the Tacony Print Works in Philadelphia, was destroyed by fire on the 12th inst., together with several other buildings. Loss, $2,000,000. This is the heaviest fire known in that city for many years.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican says of the assessment of six million dollars on the underwriters by the Portland fire, that the losses will, in many cases, ruin the companies; and few in the list will escape without impaired capitals.

Some excitement was caused at Philadelphia by the report that cholera had broken out in the frigate Chattanooga, at the Navy Yard. The reports are probably much exaggerated. The truth seems to be that five men on the ship have died of cholera morbus within a few days. The supposed cause of the disease is the eating of new potatoes

The damage to the new slaughter houses being erected by Chicago parties at Communipaw, near New York, by the wind on the night of the 8th, was greater than was supposed at first. A large amount of frame work was thrown down, and the loss is estimated at from twenty thousand to twenty-five thousand dollars.

On Saturday, 7th, according to the Meadville, Pa., Republican, Hon. C. V. Culver took up his lodgings in the Venango county jail—that seeming to be the only way in which he could escape the relentless persecution waged against him by three or four of his creditors. Mrs. Culver with the devotion of a woman, accompanied her husband, and shares his cell with him.

One of the most destructive fires known in the oil regions occurred at Bennehoff Run on Saturday night the 7th inst. A tank was struck by lightning and exploded, and the burning oil ran down the run a foot deep, burning everything in its course. Some eighteen or twenty producing wells were burned out, and it is estimated that 20,000 barrels in the tanks were burned. The loss is very heavy, but as yet, cannot be estimated.

The Commissioners appointed by the Department, have agreed on the lower part of City Hall Park, as a site for the new Post Office in New York city. The area of the piece of land selected is about seventy-five hundred feet, or nearly thirty ordinary house lots. This decision of the Commissioners will have to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Postmaster General, and afterwards brought before Congress.

The Rochester Union, of the 2d, says, the Reverend Lindsley, who whipped his child to death in Shelby, Orleans County, has fled to Canada to save his life, which he did not deem safe in the neighborhood where he resided. After giving bail in the sum of $10,000, he went to his father's house, and not feeling himself safe, he returned to Albion and offered his living body to the Sheriff for safe keeping, but the Sheriff refused to accept him, and Lindsley took the first train for Canada. These are the facts in the case.

The Portland Press says: "Our estimate of yesterday, that the number of buildings destroyed was 1,500, we are satisfied is too low. We think it will come nearer 1,800; and 3,000 families, embracing 10,000 or 12,000 persons, were rendered homeless. The amount of the losses will aggregate upwards of $10,000,000. Some persons set it as high as $15,000,000." The Portland Argus says: "It is estimated that about 2,000 buildings were burned, and property destroyed to the amount of $12,000,000, which is probably insured for about one half. The State valuation of the city was $28,000,000, and the real valuation must be over $30,000,000. Fully one third must have been destroyed."

Congressional Doings.

The following are among the most important changes in the internal tax law which passed Congress on the 6th inst.:

Raw cotton 3 cents per pound, instead of 2 cents as now.

The tax on ale, beer, porter, &c., to remain as now, $1 per barrel of 31 gallons, but the tax to be paid in stamps.

The special tax of brewers to be raised from $50 to $100 per annum.

Gas, railway, ferry, &c., companies prohibited from charging tax to consumers after 1st of May, 1867.

Tailors, milliners, shoemakers, &c., exempted from taxation for all sums under $1,000; and tax of 2 per cent. on ready-made clothing.

The whiskey tax of $2 is continued, and a special annual tax of $100 required of distillers.

The tax on incomes is not to be collected after the year 1870; but as there will be four sessions of Congress before that time, this provision can hardly be said to be irrepealable or unchangeable.

The Atlantic Cable.

As the time draws near for the departure of the Great Eastern, the greatest activity prevails on board in order that the great ship may be ready to leave her moorings in the Medway, at the latest, on Saturday, the 30th. With this view relays of workmen are employed, almost without intermission, both day and night. Up to Saturday evening at the hour for the hands discontinuing work there were only a little over 400 miles to be received on board, and by extra exertions the remaining length will be shipped by the end of the present week. The whole of the 1,660 knots of new cable has been completed, and in the course of the present week the two government vessels, the Amethyst and Iris, lent by the Admiralty, and employed from the commencement in transporting the cable from the works to the Great Eastern, will receive on board their last freights for conveyance round to the Medway.

The weight of the new cable is about 38 cwt. per mile, which is almost double the weight of the original Atlantic cable. The total quantity of cable to be taken out will exceed 2,700 miles. The steamer Midway, 1,000 tons, belonging to the company, will accompany the Great Eastern and will convey about 400 miles of cable on board. The tanks for the stowage of this quantity of cable have been fitted on board that vessel, and by the time the Great Eastern is ready to take her departure everything will be in readiness on board the Medway. The paddle wheel steamer Terrible will again accompany the Great Eastern; but it would seem that the Admiralty have intimated that a second vessel of war cannot be spared this year. The screw steamer Albany, a vessel of 1,500 tons, will accompany the expedition to render assistance, and to carry stores and supplies, besides which the screw steamer William Corry is also being fitted to proceed to sea with the other vessels.

After completing her coaling the great ship will proceed direct to Valentia, and commence the work of laying the cable about the 7th or 8th of July. No doubt whatever is entertained by Capt. Anderson of his being able to place the Great Eastern as near as possible over the spot at which the lost end of the cable lies; notwithstanding that the buoys which were left to mark the locality are swept away. Supposing the exact spot to be reached, the work of grappling for, and, when found, hauling in the lost cable, will be commenced, to accomplish which new machinery of enormous strength has been constructed and fitted on board. Twenty miles' length of wire grappling ropes have been manufactured at the company's works, and some idea of the enormous strength of this rope may be formed when it is stated that it is nearly eight inches in circumference, and is manufactured of the toughest possible steel wire.

During the brief interval which will elapse before the Great Eastern take her departure from the Medway there is still a considerable amount of work remaing to be completed on board. Chief among this is the fitting up the enormous "crinoline" guard, weighing upwards of seventeen tons, over the screw, to prevent the cable while being paid out coming in contact with the propeller. Some improvements, suggested by the experience of last year, have also been made in the machinery of the Great Eastern, among other things the paddle-wheels are being fitted with disconnecting gear. Everything is now completed aloft, new wire rigging replacing that which was found to be unsound, masts and rigging entire painted down, and funnels repaired. The decks are still crowded with machinery, workshops, and gear for coiling the cable, but much of this will be cleared away during the present week. The three tanks in which the cable is deposited have been repaired and painted, and are again water-tight, while extra precautions have been taken in the way of additional supports to resist the enormous pressure during the possible rolling of the great ship in a beam sea. The work of coaling will be carried on up to the moment of the vessel leaving Chatham, and even then an additional quantity will have to be taken in at Bearhaven.—London Times, June 19th.

THE GREAT FIRE AT PORTLAND.

Two Thousand Buildings Burned—More than Two Thousand Families made Homeless—Ten Millions Dollars Worth of Property Destroyed.

PORTLAND, Me., (July 5) to the New York World.

One of the most beautiful, of our smaller Atlantic cities now lies in ruins. Portland, which, since the completion of the Grand Trunk Railroad, and the selection of its noble harbor as the winter terminus of the Canadian line of steamers to Europe, has made such rapid strides in prosperity as to promise at no distant day a serious rivalry with Boston for the primacy of commercial importance in New England, has been visited in a season of profound peace, and on the anniversary of our national independence, with a conflagration so sweeping and tremendous that it can be likened only to the desolation by fire of some of our southern capitals in the very crisis and fury of the late war.

How the fire was communicated to the small wooden building in which it seems to have first broken out, has hardly yet become a subject of conjecture. Some months ago a mysterious individual was arrested here shortly after a fire had taken place in Free street, who finally confessed that he had come to Portland for the express purpose of burning the city, and that he was the author of the conflagration which last year laid waste the capital of the State, Augusta, a conflagration which, until this day's sad work was done, ranked first in the annals of our misfortunes of this kind. It is possible that this last catastrophe may have been the work of some such incendiary madness; but more probable, perhaps, that it is to be carried to the account of the carnival of fire and gunpowder with which it is considered proper to celebrate the birthday of the nation. Whatever its origin, its extent—of which, unfortunately, we cannot yet speak with precision, since the brave firemen are still battling with the enemy, and have not yet secured their victory—is simply appalling. In less than twelve hours one-third of the property of this busy and flourishing city has been rolled up in a scroll of fire and blown away in clouds of smoke. Portland is divided into an upper and lower town. On the high land to the south and west stand the handsomest private residences, and the most picturesque streets of the city. Conspicuous among these is the stately mansion of Mr. John Brown, the architectural pride of Portland, a house literally set upon a hill, and the tower of which is the first object descried by the traveler coming from Boston on the railway. From this mansion, proceeding eastward as far as State street and Park street, the former of which, with its noble rows of fine forest trees, is one of the most charming streets in America, extends the richest "home quarter" of Portland, and this region has happily been spared.

The fire began, as we have stated, below the high lands to the eastward of the two large stations of the Boston, Maine and Eastern Railroad, which, together with the Grand Trunk depots, and the most part of the warehouses on Commercial street, have escaped the flames. From the little boat-builder's shop in which it originated, just before sunset, it was communicated to the splendid sugar house of Mr. Brown, of whose residence we have already spoken as the finest in the city. They constituted the most extensive sugar works in New England, boiling over 40,000 casks of molasses annually. Solid and substantial as they were, they had disappeared totally before 10 o'clock at night; and the wind, blowing almost a gale from the southwest, swept the mighty mass of flame away from Commercial street, and up towards the heart of the lower town. Exchange street, in which were situated the handsomest jewelers' shops of the city, the newspaper buildings—four in number—the Merchants' news-room, and many offices, public and private, including the law office of Senator Fessenden, and the British consul's office; Middle street, from just below the United States Hotel, down to Exchange street, with all the banks in the city—seven in number—the best retail shops, and a number of offices occupied by the leading members of the Portland bar; the handsome new custom house, which contained the post office also; the telegraph offices, situated at the corner of Exchange and Middle streets, directly opposite the custom house—all were wrapped in flames as the fiery surges swept steadily onward to the east and north.

The flames passed across, in the rear of the United States Hotel, into Congress street, destroying the buildings of the Portland Natural History Society, and with them its valuable collections, and, sorest loss of all, perhaps, to the architecture of the "Forest City," the new city and county building, a very handsome edifice, of hewn stone and brick, of which the people of Portland were justly proud, claiming that it ranked next after the new city hall of Boston, among the buildings of the kind in New England. This fine structure was completed only two or three years ago, and was believed to be so nearly fire-proof that many persons had sent their furniture and other goods into it as the conflagration went on, hoping thus to save them. But all went together in the common ruin.

During the brief darkness of the summer night, the spectacle presented by the conflagration, as viewed from the upper part of the city, was indescribably grand; but it is not easy to indulge one's love of the picturesque in the presence of these smoking ruins, which alone now represent what yesterday stood forth as the accumulated results of human energy and enterprise, to the estimated value of some $10,000,000. Nearly 2,000 families, and, it is computed, from 7,000 to 8,000 individuals in all, are to-day destitute and homeless, who in the morning of yesterday constituted nearly one-third of the population of one of the most orderly, prosperous and industrious cities in America. Eight churches, seven hotels, every printing office capable of issuing a newspaper, have vanished.

The behavior of the people has been beyond praise. Order has been preserved throughout all these exciting hours, and the inhabitants have vied with each other, and with the good people who from all the neighboring towns have hurried in to the rescue, in their energetic efforts to maintain the public peace and to put down the conflagration.

Charles Staples & Son, machinist; loss $40,000; insured for $12,000 in the Home, N. Y., and a Boston company.

Upham's flouring mill, loss $30,000; insured for $5,000 in J. W. Munger's agency.

N. P. Richardson & Co., stove foundry, loss $50,000; insured $26,000.

The Press office, loss, $12,000; insured for $7,500 in the international and Protection companies.

Brown & Thurston's job office, loss $20,000; insured $6,500 in Dirigo and Maine Mutual and Relief and Republic (New York) companies.

Judge Clifford, of the United States circuit court, lost part of his law library, and District Judge Fox lost all of his.

Wood's hotel, loss, $75,000; insured $20,000.

Masonic hall with all its contents was destroyed; partially insured.

Eight churches are also burned; the Second Parish, the Third Parish, the Pearl St., (Universalist) the First Baptist, St. Stephen's, (Episcopal,) Bethel, Swedenborgian and the Catholic chapel, with Bishop Bacon's residence and the Convent school attached.

The Ocean Marine Insurance Company, loss, $50,000; insured from $8,000 to $10,000 in the Howard and Lorillard companies.

Charles F. Thrasher & Co., loss, $17,000; insured for $9,000 in the Metropolitan and Niagara Insurance companies.

Judge Fox's library, loss $2,000.

Judge Clifford's library, loss $12,000; no insurance.

Merrill & Small, wholesale clothing and trimming, No. 145 Middle street, loss, $15,000; fully insured in the Lorrillard and Hartford companies.

Churchill, Browns & Mason, loss, $150,000; well insured.

[The Dispatch then gives the names of 270 "prominent business firms," who were "totally burned out."

The store of Emery & Waterhouse, hardware, on Middle street, singularly was passed by the sea of flames unscathed, though everything was swept on each side.

The Portland society of Natural History, for a second time, has lost its valuable collection, a misfortune which will appeal to the generosity of other societies throughout the country.

It is estimated that 2,000 buildings are burned, and property destroyed to the amount of $10,000,000, which is probably insured about half.

The state valuation was $28,000,000, and the real valuation must be over $30,000,000. Fully one-third must have been destroyed.

Nothing can be done in the city to-day, except to take care of the homeless, and that is rapidly being done. Everybody's "latch-string hangs out," and a cheerful and buoyant feeling prevails. There was no confusion or struggle during the fire. Every one was courteous and kind, and all worked earnestly together. The firemen from abroad worked nobly, and assisted greatly in saving property.

The churches and many other edifices are thrown open for the homeless, and committees are appointed to relieve the distressed.

For some hours during the conflagration communication was cut off between the front and back part of the city, except by over a mile journey around.

There is not a power press left in the city to strike off a paper upon.

At the present writing (afternoon) the flames are still troublesome in some quarters, and are working down into the custom-house badly.

Almost all the hose in the city has been bursted and some engines are used up.

The loss of John B. Brown & Sons must be at least $1,000,000, they owning a large amount of real estate in every quarter of the city. They are insured about one-half the value.

The editor of the Press, with the aid of a job office, got out a small extra on the day following the calamity, which says: "If a sermon upon the instability of human affairs were the one thing desirable now, it would be easy to dwell in pathetic periods upon the sudden dissolution of the solid piles of brick and stone, which two days ago were homes, shops and haunts of men, but have now vanished like a dream. The Postoffice is solitary in the midst of a forest of unhoused chimneys, and a labyrinth of heated and crumbling walls; its granite is blistered and shivered by the intense flame which swept over it night before last. The dome of City Hall and the spires of our churches have passed away like eve ing clouds. Where was once Exchange street, is now only a heap of ruins. A large part of the accumulated wealth, the savings of this and former industrious generations has been destroyed. Half of our population has been turned into the street without warning—there is the fact, black and terrible, without palliation or disguise; but if brick and stone are perishable, and may blow away as lightly as a gossamer, there is yet something solid and enduring in the world—the patience and enterprise which built up our beautiful city. In this disaster, never have the sterling qualities of our people shone forth more noble than now. It is hard to see the fruits of so many years of patient endeavor wasted in a few hours, but the indomitable courage which faces the fact admits the misfortune in all its magnitude and sets promptly to work to repair. Commercial street has suffered comparatively little, and our West India and coastwise trade will be but little affected. The dry goods, clothing and boot and shoe interests are more seriously disturbed for the time; but in every quarter we hear only of rebuilding and resuming business after the least possible interval. Temporary rents for business purposes were in active demand yesterday, and building contracts were already in the market for bidders."

The lighting of lamps by electricity is no new thing, but what Mr. Heyl claims as the new feature in his invention is a stop-cock combined with an electric battery, by means of which the operator at any central point can turn the gas off or on, at his pleasure, at the same time igniting it with the electric battery. The stop-cock is the original feature of the invention, any number of which can be operated at the same time by a piece of platina wire. In case the wind blows the gas out, it will ignite again of its own accord from the heat which is retained in the wires, without any electricity whatever.

In the process of vomiting he expelled from his stomach a live snake 11 inches in length and about the size of an ordinary pipe-stem.

—The Washington Star has the following: "A few evenings since, a handsome young lady in fashionable attire created a sensation in one of the street cars by tenderly caressing a great ugly brown toad which she held in her hand, stroking its back fondly, and occasionally raising it to her lips for a salute. The creature (the toad, we mean) seemed to be thoroughly tamed and quite at home, much to the disgust of some old ladies in the vicinity, who were shocked at its playful attempts to renew acquaintance with them."

—The last minutes of the Nebraska Annual Conference show that there are in the Territory twenty-three Methodist ministers, occupying the towns and settlements along the Missouri River from the Kansas line to Decatur, and westward to Wood River, thus maintaining the old glory of the denomination as the pioneer church. The memberships gathered by these apostolic laborers now number 1,429, besides 569 probationers. Six churches and eight parsonages have been built; the total value of which is $53,395. Thirty-one Sunday Schools are reported, having 226 officers and teachers, and 1,388 scholars.

—A regular pond frog was discovered on the 13th, in the middle of a large stone, at Springfield, Kentucky. The stone was a piece of solid old blue limestone, which a correspondent of the Louisville Courier says is the oldest stratum that crops out in the State. The writer adds that the frog began to give signs of life as soon as the breaking of the rock let in the air. In a short time he seemed sprightly and wide-awake, but soon began to show signs of excitement and pain. He was then placed in a small glass jar, which was loosely corked. In this place he lived until Sunday night, June 17.

—The Cleveland Herald of the 6th inst. gives a thrilling story of a brave mother's devotion and peril. The dwelling house of a Mr Suttle of Huron county, was burned on the 3d, with its contents. The parents awoke to find their premises wrapped in flames. Mr Suttle having breathed the hot air was unable to do anything. Upon seeing this, Mrs. Suttle started for the children, and succeeded in rescuing two. The other child, a boy some two years of age, was still in the house. Again Mrs. Suttle, at the risk of her life, started for him. While the flames were rolling in the upper part of the rooms, she crept on her hands and knees under them and rescued the little fellow. Thus three lives were saved in the dead of night by the exertions of a frail woman.

—The Milwaukee Sentinel of the 2d says an old lady arrived in that city in the last company of emigrants from Norway, who is now nearly a hundred and five years of age. She had in the company, four children, all married, twenty grand children, fifteen of whom are married, forty-four great-grand children, six of whom are married, and ten great great-grand children, making in all seventy-eight descendants—all of them in the party which passed through this city the present week. If we add the wives and husbands of these direct descendants of the old lady, we will have a family of one hundred and three members, the aged mother of which still lives, and is in very good health, although becoming quite infirm. The name of this wonderful woman, "the mother of a mighty race," is Katrina Jansen.

He (the supplicant) was sent, he added, by the Virgin Mary to beseech the King to that effect. Being considered out of his mind, he was sent to a lunatic asylum.

—The piano-forte manufacturer, M. —The latest piece of ingenuity at clubs on the continent, is the game of cabs which is played in the following manner: Two players place themselves at the window of the club, one taking the even numbers painted on the cabs that pass, and the other the odd. Recently the sum of 300,000 francs was lost by the Duke de H——, in Paris, who was unfortunate enough to stake on even numbers.

—A large military hospital has been established at Breslau, on the Oder, in Silesia, by orders of the Prussian Government, in which has been placed, and made ready for immediate use, a circular saw, worked by steam power, to be used for the purpose of amputating such limbs of wounded soldiers as the surgeons in charge shall deem best to have removed. Not satisfied with exterminating the Poles, Katkoff wanted to exterminate the Germans too, who are strong in court and family interest, and whose ramifications extend through every department of social life, trade, industry, science, and literature. The Minister of Interior interfered, and Mr. Katkoff decamped through fear of being exiled to Siberia.

—The Mayor of Toronto, Canada, has written the following letter to the New York Times: "Your fulsome laudation and that of your ass of a correspondent of everything British and Canadian, which appears lately in your journal, can easily be seen into. Aye, your mock sympathy. Why did you not show your colors before? The danger being now over, I beg leave to give you to understand that we, as true Britains, fear not; that even I can raise Orangemen enough to hurl back any number of Yankees or Fenian marauders which may attempt to invade the sacred soil of Upper Canada."

—The other evening, at an English party in Paris, Sir George Scott, recently arrived from New Caledonia, where he commanded a detachment on active service, exhibited two anthrophophagi whom he had taken prisoners in a skirmish with the natives. These young cannibals handed about ices and glasses of eau sucree to the guests. Sir George informed his invites that one of them eaten his grandfather, and the other devoured the master who had instructed them in the use of the club. These two young men were as charming as possible and were themselves in danger of being devoured by caresses.

A HARTFORD woman, wife of a modest mechanic, Eli Walker, has fallen heir to the immense fortune of thirty five millions of dollars by the death of some relative in England. Ex-Governor T. A. THOMAS BUCHANAN READ, the poet, is in trouble. Mr. Handy concluded last week not to have an Art Gallery in his new Opera House, as he had become tired of the squabbles among the artists. Mr. Read thereupon wrote some rose-colored letters, letting the art failure down in gorgeous tints, and to one of the letters he signed Mr Handy's name. The latter on finding the letter in print, published a card repudiating it, and declaring it a forgery. Read rejoins that it contained the gist of a conversation he had had with Mr. Handy, and that in writing the letter and signing Mr Handy's name he had only taken a poetic license.

A LONDON letter says: "Queen Victoria is never cheered when she visits London now-a-days. The remark is, that 'the people have forgotten how to cheer.' She frequently visits town, but her carriages are permitted to pass in silence. The people are either alienated or chilled in their feelings toward her. On her birthday, a few days since, I was struck with the faintness and stinginess of the illumination. She does many eccentric things, to which allusion is made in the papers in a very covert and veiled manner. For instance, The Star for June 4th refers to the Queen's recent visit to the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland at Cliefden: 'The visit to Cliefden was, it is stated, a sudden inspiration, and unexpected by the Duke and Duchess, who had invited a party to stay there during the races.'"

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

CORN MEAL fed in large quantities to milch cows, is believed to decrease the quality of the milk, while it increases the fat.

A DAIRYMAN objects to the plan of milking cows very early in the morning, because they cannot be well milked at a corresponding time in the afternoon, and he thinks it very injurious to allow cows to go fourteen to fifteen hours between milkings.

ALL farming implements exposed to the wet, should be thoroughly oiled in the joints, or where they are apt to rot. It is sometimes best to oil the whole instrument. It will make the wook softer and better to handle—it adds much to its durability and toughness.

EARLY cut hay for cows, is highly recommended as far to be preferred to that cut when fully matured, or "dead ripe." It is claimed to be better than later cut hay with the addition of Indian meal. Indeed the latter is pronounced injurious to cows in causing garget and other inflammatory diseases.

GESTATION OF ANIMALS.—M. Tessier, who for a period of many years, was Superintendent of Experimental Farm established under an auspices of the French Government at Paris, found that of 582 mares, the shortest period was 287, and the longest 419 days—exhibiting the surprising difference of one hundred and thirty-two days! Another author observes that the most conclusive and satisfactory experiment on record, is that instituted by order of Lord Spencer, in which the period of gestation in no less than 764 cows, was accurately ascertained. From this it appears that the shortest period in which a live calf was produced was 220 day; but no calf produced under 242 days could be reared. The longest period of gestation was given in the Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society it appears that 314 cows calved before the 284th day, and 310 calved after the 285th day, so that the probable period of gestation in this useful animal may be fixed at 284 or 285 day. The average period of gestation in the ewe is given by a German author, as 161 days and that of the sow as 143.

BAROMETERS.—At a recent meeting of the N. Y. Farmers' Club, the value of barometers was somewhat extensively discussed. Among other speakers, Solon Robinson said he would state it as his firm, honest belief that a barometer was of no possible practical utility to a farmer. It will sometimes indicate the approach of wind, and sometimes that may be accompanied by rain.

Mr. Bartlett coincided in these views as expressed by Mr. Robinson and suggested as a practical test of the value of barometers that farmers should communicate the result of their observations, whether they were able by their use to foretell the state of the weather days or hours in advance.

Col. Henry said the laws which governed the barometer are not those which always produce rain but wind; that the barometer indicates the approach of nothing more. There is a record in the Fulton Bank of this city which shows that the quantity of rain in the period of three years through a long series, is almost identically the same.

S. Edward Todd said, I have studied a barometer myself five years, and would now give more for any ordinary, cheap, rain-indicator than I would for a barometer. Mr. Todd gave several cases in which farmers had pronounced the barometers useless as a means of foretelling rain.

Ladies of Delicate Constitution

And uncertain health are strenuously advised to throw aside the nauseous and useless preparations with which they are accustomed to drug themselves, and test the hygeian, body-and-mind-strengthening virtues of HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS. In all the complaints and disabilities arising from various causes, they will find this cheering, refreshing and invigorating preparation of extraordinary efficacy. Its regulating properties are wonderful, and as a remedy for the languor, nausea, tremors, convulsions, hysteria, &c, which often accompany the development of womanhood, it has no equal among the prescriptions of the faculty or advertised medicines. For the many distressing feelings which usher in and often follow the period of maternity, and also for the painful and dangerous symptoms which sometimes accompany "change of life," HOSTETTER'S BITTERS are earnestly recommended. No other restorative seems to suit so well the constitutions and the organization of the feebler sex. In all cases of Female Debility, where there is a want of brisk, vital action, the BITTERS produce a most important change—relieving local weakness, and re-establishing the general health.

THE GREATEST

DISCOVERY OF THE AGE!

Farmers, Families, and others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr. Tobias' Venetian Liniment for dysentery, colic, croup, chronic rheumatism, sore throat, toothache, sea sickness, cuts, burns, swelling, bruises, old sores, headache, mosquito bites, pains in the limbs, chest, back, &c. If it does not give relief, the money will be refunded. All that is asked is a trial, and use it according to the directions.

Dr. TOBIAS—Dear Sir: I have used your Venetian Liniment in my family for a number of years, and believe it to be the best article for what it is recommended that I have ever used. For sudden attack of the croup it is invaluable. I have no hesitation in recommending it for all the uses it professes to cure. I have sold it for many years, and it gives entire satisfaction. CHAS. H. TRIMMER.

Quakertown, N. J, May 8, 1866.

Price, 40 and 80 cents. Sold by all druggists. Office 56 Cortlandt street, New York.

DR. SWAIN'S VEGETABLE HAIR BALM invariably restores grey hair to its original color, without staining the skin or clothing. It leaves the most dry, dead and crisp hair, soft, moist and glossy, causes it to curl, and keeps it in its place, while it promotes its growth and prevents its falling off.

It contains neither oil or alcohol.

Numerous preparations of oil, alcohol and sulphur have been palmed upon the public, and having totally failed to give satisfaction, the manufacturers have deservedly come to grief.

Dr. Swain warrants his Vegetable Balm to accomplish all that he claims for it, and authorizes his agent to refund the money wherever it fails to give satisfaction.

It is an entirely new and scientific preparation, produced by the distilation of rare and fragrant flowers, which renders it not only the best renewer in the world, but makes it particularly agreeable as a hair dressing to both old and young, while its liquid purity and floral odor are in striking contrast with the nasty mixtures usually sold.

The proprietor has letters from many of the most distinguished as well as fashionable people, judges, clergymen, lawyers, physicians, opera singers, actresses, &c, certifying to the remarkable virtues of the Balm.

Don't let any dealer urge upon you a different article, but if your tradesman does not keep this, send one dollar for a trial bottle to the nearest agent, or the proprietor.

If for hair dressing, send for No. 2.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS AS A GENERAL ASSISTANT OF NATURE.

What is health? What is disease?

Health is when the supply and expenditure are equal. Disease when the supply and expenditure are unequal.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS impart certain expulsive powers to all matters in the body whose life is below the standard of the surrounding parts, or which have remained longer than the time nature designed. So in fevers and all that class of cases which soon run into mortification, BRANDRETH'S PILLS have marvelous curative qualities. Our bodies are continually changing, and it is by this change we live. Should matter remain in organs beyond the time nature designed, pain and inflammation set in, which is nothing more than a reparatory effort for our good. All Brandreth's Pills are supposed from their results to do, is simply ASSISTING THESE EFFORTS OF NATURE.

☞ John Robinson's Great Show exhibited in this village last Monday according to announcement. The Menagerie was not as good as some, though the exhibition of animals was very good, but the Circus was excellent. The tumbling and gymnastics could not very well be beat. The attendence was good both afternoon and evening, and the show as a whole appeared to give general satisfaction.

☞ We desire to call the attention of our readers to the new Barber Shop that has recently been fitted up by O Beardsley over Bidwell's Store. All those desiring a "good Shave" or a "neat clip" can not do better than patronize Beardsley.

☞ The will of the late General Cass was filed in the Probate Office in Detroit on Saturday. It contains no charitable bequests, and only leaves special legacies, amounting in the aggregate to 15,600, to the following persons: Wm. Foxen, Geo. S. Frost, John E. Hunt, Jas. O. Fitzpatrick, and Marcella Bligh. The rest of the estate is divided equally among his four children: Lewis Cass, Jr., who is appointed sole executor; Mrs. Canfield, Mrs. Ledyard; and Baroness Von Limburg; save that Mrs. Canfield receives $10,000 more than the others. This lady has been Mr. Cass' constant attendant for some years, he having lived with her since his retirement from public life. The division of the property will be made by C. C. Trowbridge and Geo. S. Frost. The probable value of the whole estate is about $1,500,000.

☞ Our enterprising Shoe dealer E. H Hoag, has lately purchased a full assortment of sewing machines for leather work, hired experienced workmen and made the necessary arrangements for manufacturing all kinds of Boots & Shoes, Gaiters &c., from a Kip Boot to a lady's slipper. He is turning out some very fine work upon ladies shoes, equal if not superior to any eastern make. He has been to considerable expense to fit up a first class Boot & Shoe manufactory and deserves the patronage of the public.

Escaped.

A Circus generally makes work for the officers of the law and John Robinsons show did not differ from other shows in this respect. One William Godfrey, who was traveling with the show as a hanger on, came up from Adrian on Sunday, with several other of the employees and stopped at the "National" over night. During his stay the poor fellow was attacked with an intense desire to try on other peoples clothing, and accordingly appropriated pants and vest belonging to E. Lockwood and coat worth $40, which belonged to M. B. Burgher, one of the Proprietors of the National.— It was afterwards found out that he had also been purloining Circus Tickets quite extensively and selling them. After the Coats were missed suspicion fastened upon Godfrey and he was arressted and the clothing found his possession. He was first arrested by Constable Niblack and afterwards taken before Justice Hewitt for examination. While Wm. Richard and the Justice were engaged in making out the necessary papers the Constable stepped down stairs a moment, and the prisoner took occasion to quietly step out also and turn the Key upon the Court.— The Court however put his head out of the window and gave the alarm, but the thief in the mean time got about five minutes the start of the officers and made good his escape. He took a northerly direction through the Cornfields and woods and although there were six or eight men upon his track he succeeded in eluding their search.

Base Ball.

The following communications will explain themselves:

TO THE "TECUMSEH BASE BALL CLUB" —Your Challenge, to play the Second Nine of your Club, a match game of Base Ball, on Friday July 27th, is accepted. CHARLES SPAFFORD, Sec'y. of "Chief Club."

The two Tecumseh Clubs will now test their skill in base ball playing.

Another Murder, Probably.

On Monday morning of last week, the body of a young man was run over by a freight train a short distance east of Clayton. Appearances indicated that the man had been murdered and his body placed upon the track to be so mangled by the cars as to hide evidences of the foul deed. But murder will out. The body was cold when the conductor of the train got to it, and there was a mass of clotted blood where it was lying when struck by the engine. Besides, a watch and several hundred dollars, known to have been in possession of the young man (whose name we do not remember) the night before, were missing.—Hudson Gazette.

HINT TO LETTER WRITERS.—By the late act to ame Postal laws, it is provided that postmasters shall return to the writers, free of cost, all letters not delivered or called for, when requested so to do by the person mailing them. Persons mailing letters should bear this in mind and write on them a request to the postmaster to return the letter to them if not delivered in any number of days they may choose to mention. By this course much delay and anxiety may often be avoided.

☞ The showery weather during the past few days has greatly interfered with the harvesting on the part of the farmers, and if it continues much longer we shall be blessed with grown wheat and sticky bread for another year. The wheat crop as a whole will probably turn out fully as well as was anticipated in the spring. Most pieces are quite light upon the ground, but the berry is very plump and well filled. Our wheat, what we have of it, will be of a better quality than usual this year, provided the rainy weather does not continue.

Attempt to Murder.

On July 22 Thomas Pennell, who lives one mile north of Hudson was arrested and lodged in jail at Adrian, charged with the attempt to murder his wife by hanging. The attempt was said to have been made last Wednesday evening. As there have been frequent difficulties in the family it was supposed, that this, like former matters, would be hushed up, but as the matter is to be judiciously investigated there is no longer any reason for silence. The complaint is made by the wife, who alleges that on the evening in question, about dark, Pennell asked her to go with him out to the barn to see some work he had been doing that day, when they had seen the work, he asked her to look at a hens nest that he said was in the barn on the scaffold over the floor, and induced her to climb on the hay-mow and on to some old hay which had been piled up to some hight above the hay girt. On the top of the pile of hay was a plank about eight feet long, and she stood on the plank and locked for the nest. She told him she could see no nest. He replied "I can, its right up there," and while she was loooking he pushed the plank further out over the floor. She said "Pennell do you want to push me off?" He replied "O, no," but pushing the plank again, reached up and threw over her head a rope one end of which was fastened to a beam extending over the floor from one mow-beam to another. The other end was formed into a noose, which caught her under the chin passed behind her right ear in front of her left ear, and tipping the plank, she swung off over the floor, the rope drawing tight over her head. As she swung off Pennell said,— "There my dear, that is good for you."— As she felt the rope come to her head she threw up her left hand and caught the rope near the left ear.

As she swung over the floor her feet struck the bay girt, and she sprung up enough to enable her to loosen the noose and throw it off her head, and fell to the floor. Pennell sprung to the floor and commenced beating her, but she got away from him, and ran out on the street and westward, screaming "murder" at the top of her voice. She ran about 150 rods to a neighbor's house before she stopped. This is her story.

Pennell claims that she coaxed him out to the barn and up on to the hay, when she put the rope over her own head and swung off, and he rescued her, and as soon as rescued she ran out and screamed "murder." They have lived together a good many years, and raised a large family. Three of the daughters have married well, and are living here. They have at home two sons and a daughter, all small. On the night in question the two sons were away from home for the purpose of staying all night. The daughter, a small child, was at home. The occurrence happened about 9 o'clock in the evening. The wife has been reported periodically insane, and last year an effort was made to get her into the Insane Asylum, which failed. The examination is to come off before R. R. Robbins, Esq, of Adrian, some time during the present week.

JACKSON AND LANSING TELEGRAPH.— We understand that the poles for this line have been all put up, and that the wire is ready for the completion of the work. In a few days we may expect to receive the first message from the State capitol over the electric chain. The officers of the Western Union Telegraph Company deserve great credit for the promptitude displayed in pushing the line so rapidly forward.—Jackson Citizen.

We wish they would continue the line to Adrian.

Married.

At the residence of the bride's father, on Tuesday, July 24th, by Rev. Wm. Hogarth, of Detroit, Mr. George W. Graves, of Manchester, and Miss Sophie M., daughter of W. H. Osborn, of Macon.

The marriage ceremony took place at 10 o'clock in the forenoon and the Bridal party left on the Express train South for a trip to Lake Superior. This union adds another to the long list of marriages that have occurred during the past two or three years among the young people of Tecumseh. Mr. Graves and Miss Osborn both passed their childhood school days in Tecumseh, are widely known and highly esteemed, and they commence life's journey attended by the best wishes of a large circle of relatives and friends. May they enjoy a long life of usefulness and prosperity, and may no untoward event mar the happiness of the voyage so auspiciously began.

GOOD TEMPLARS CONVENTION.— The Good Templars of the six adjoining counties will meet in mass convention at Union Hall, Jackson, on Thursday and Friday, August 30th and 31st. The lodges of Washtenaw, Lenawee, Hillsdale, Calhoun, Eaton, Ingham and Jackson counties are each expected to send five delegates to represent their respective lodges All members are respected to attend as visitors. The meetings will be addressed by Rev. John Russell, G. W. C. T. and Rev. D. C. Wright, D. D., G. W. C. T. of the State. Eminent speakers are expected from abroad. It is expected much profit to the cause of temperence will arise from this gathering.

WORK FOR WET DAYS.—Look after your implements and tools. Do not let them lay around in out of the way places to get rusty, but have "a place for everything and everything in its place." These are the days to attend to them, and when you get through and have looked over your cattle and sheep, take your paper in hand and see if you cannot get some new ideas to work upon when the rain is over.

Monroe Taylor Gold Medal Soap, to award him the credit of being far ahead of all competitors in catering to the luxury of ladies, who prize nice, clean, white clothes (and what lady does not?) It is a peculiar institution of itself, and such a luxury to use it, that after one trial, it is always found to be one of the most useful articles in the household. PHŒNIX
HARTFORD CONN
INSURANCE COMPANY.

Lost $10,000 in the late Portland Fire and on the eigth day after the fire every loss had been adjusted AND PAID. This fire illustrates the importance of first class insurance. If a building is worth insuring at all it is worth insuring in a company that is perfectly sound and that pays promptly. If a man accidentally burns down he dislikes to wait six months for his money. The Phœnix has lost over $6000 in Tecumseh and has paid every loss with promptness. Policies executed to order with neatness and dispatch by

WHAT DOES BABY THINK?

BY J. G. HOLLAND.

What is the little one thinking about?
Very wonderful things, no doubt—
Unwritten history!
Unfathomed mystery!
Yet he laughs and cries, and eats and drinks,
And chuckles and crows and nods and winks,
As if his head was as full of kinks
And curious riddles as any sphinx,
Warped by colic and wet by tears,
Punctured by pins and tortured by fears
Our little nephew will lose two years;
And he'll never know
Where the summers go:
He need not laugh, for he'll find it so!

Who can tell what a baby thinks?
Who can follow the gossamer links
By which the man is fetched his way
Out from the shore of the great unknown,
Blind and wailing and alone,
Into the light of day?
Out from the shore of the unknown sea,
Tossing in pitiful agony—
Of the unknown sea that reels and rolls,
Specked with the barks of little souls—
Barks that were launched on the other side,
And slipped from heaven on an ebbing tide!

What does he think of his mother's eyes?
What does he think of his mother's hair?
What of the cradle-roof that flies
Forward and backward through the air?
What does he think of his mother's breast—
Bare and beautiful smooth and white,
Seeking it ever with fresh delight—
Cup of his life and couch of his rest?

What does he think when her quick embrace
Incloses his head and buries his face
Deep where the heart-throbs sink and swell
With a tenderness she can never tell,
Though she murmur the words
Of all the birds—
Words she has learned to murmur well!
Now he thinks he'll go to sleep!
I can see the shadow creep
Over his eyes in soft eclipse
Over his brow and over his lips
Out to his little finger-tips!
Softly sinking, down he goes!
Down he goes! Down he goes!
See! He is hushed in sweet repose!

Children in English Iron Mills.

Sad Stories of Suffering.

A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, who has visited some of the iron furnaces in the "black country" of Staffordshire and Worcestershire, tells these sad stories:

"In the mills and forges boys of all ages, from eight and upward, may be found, amid the labyrinth of machinery and the coils of heated iron, engaged by day and night in turning long, red hot seething bars. Their activity is very great, owing to the nature of their work, which requires rapidity of movement, and contrasts strangely with their otherwise jaded and worn appearance. In addition to the labor of dragging along the iron, each of these little fellows has to run, in short stages, a distance of more than eleven miles every day, in an oppressive atmosphere, thick with dust and steam. Owing to the quick and uncertain movements of the hot iron bars in their passage through successive rolls before having time to cool, the occupation of these boys is attended with some danger, a serious burn being an almost every day occurrence.

"Standing in the midst of an extensive forge a few years ago I was alarmed by a cry of terror at the farther end of the works. There was a general rush to the spot, and I shall never forget the horrible and sickening sight that met our view. A large rod of seething iron in coming from the rolls had somehow twisted aside, and had literally pierced through the body of a little fellow some ten years old. For a while the roar of the machinery was suspended, and two or three brawny puddlers carried the helpless creature home; but when the first thrill of horror had passed away the wheels were again set in motion and all went on as before.

"The lives of these boys are almost entirely spent in the forges, except the hours allotted to sleep. They have their meals there, and in the snatches of leisure it is their playground. In most of the works is the arm or basin of a canal, the water of which is kept is kept in a state of chronic fever, and in which, despite its inky color, they delight to bathe, both in winter and summer. So constant are they in their ablutions that they often come out parboiled, like a washer-woman's thumb. Some of the proprietors of these works have provided night schools for the instruction of the children in their employ; but, as a rule, they are in mind and body alike neglected, and the densest ignorance prevails. They have no home training, most of their houses being locked up all day, the parents and all the children being out at work; and returning home fatigued at night, nothing but bed or a carousal in the Fox and Dragon is acceptable.

"Returning home late one evening, I saw two little children, a boy and girl, lying asleep on a door-step, which proved to be that of their own home. On awakening them they told me they were waiting for their mother to come out of a neighboring tavern, and open the door. They had no father, and had been hard at work all day. The boy worked in a forge, the girl in a foundry, and the mother in a japanning factory; and being thus separated all day, no bond of affection seemed to bind them when they met together.

"West of Dudley is a strange wild region known as the 'nailing district,' composed of scattered hamlets, to all the houses of which is attached what appears to the stranger a blacksmith's shop. The manufacture of wrought nails is, and has been for a century or more, the great staple industry of the district. It is carried on by the nailers in their own houses. In few trades of the district does the employment of women and young children assume a more objectionable form than in this. The women seem to have lost all traces of the modesty of their sex, and from childhood are addicted to swearing, smoking,—resembling as far as possible the other sex in their habits and deportment, even to the wearing of their coarse flannel jackets. They mostly marry very young, often at fourteen, and seldom later than eighteen or twenty. With such women as mothers, it is not difficult to judge of their children. From tenderest ages, often from five to six years, they are trained to that round of labor in which their lives are doomed to be spent. The first stage is 'blowing the bellows,' and next they are taught to forge the smaller kinds of nails.

"The hours of labor are dreadfully prolonged, often exceeding sixteen hours per day; the rate of remuneration very low, and the homes are consequently wretchedly poor. Entering one of them lately, I saw the father, mother, and eight sons and daughters, all toiling in an ill-ventilated dirty-hovel. It was growing late in the evening, and I inquired, 'Is it not time to cease your day's work?' 'Oh, noa, maister,' rejoined the mother; 'we've a noit's work afore us yet, or there'll be no bread o' the the loaf o' Sunday. It was Friday night, and it was, as I learnt, a practice to work from Friday morning until Saturday afternoon, without having more than short snatches of rest for meals. While I lingered, a little fellow, who could not have been more than eight, fell from his work apparently exhausted, but his father, on observing it, threw at him a hammer handle, telling him with an oath, to recommence his work. He took no part in our conversation, having, like his two eldest daughters, a short pipe in his mouth, which seemed to him and them 'the calumet of peace."

"This is by no means a solitary case. Hundreds of such instances are to be found of little boys and girls, just emerging from boyhood, ill-fed, ill-clothed and overworked, trained amid vulgarity and vice, and in the densest gloom of ignorance. Were it not for Sunday-schools, I shudder to think of the future of these hapless children. Their lives could only be compared with those of the 'heathen in his blindness,' on whose behalf Exeter Hall is pleading so eloquently during this month of May. I visited a Sunday-school in the nailing district a few Sundays ago, and found there a multitude of these little 'Christian savages.' They were lustily singing a hymn as I entered which is very popular in the district, rather, I suspect, because it goes to a lively tune than because many of the children can heartily appreciate the sentiment of the words:

"I thank the goodness and the grace
Which on my birth have smiled,
And made me in these Christian days
A happy English child.

"I was not born a little slave
To labor in the sun,
And wish I were but in the grave
And all my labor done.

"A sad feeling came over me as I looked upon the crowd of wan pale faces and worn frames, and compared that scene to the burden of the song of praise, and I could not help wishing from my heart that the contrast was something more striking between 'a little slave' and these 'happy English children.'

"In other branches of the hardware and metal trades the evils of child labor equally abound, especially in the foundries, japan work, and tin plate factories, but, as a rule, they are less aggravated in the larger establishments, than in the smaller workshops."

The Niagara of the West.

A Description of the Great Shoshone Falls, of Idaho.

From the Salt Lake Vidette.

Away in the wilds of Idaho, midway between Salt Lake and Oregon, the air is thundering and the earth is rent by a cataract as imposing as Niagara. Situate on the sagebrush plains, which calmly sleep between the Rocky Mountains and the Cascade Range, and are alike untenanted by Ceres or the god of gold, the great Shoshone is a world-wonder, which for savage scenery and power sublime stands unrivaled in America. These falls of the Snake or Lewis fork of the Columbia have been but a couple of years discovered, and have been seen as yet by scarce as many scores of white men. This majestic masterpiece of nature's engineering lies a few miles off from the overland stage route running northwesterly between Salt Lake and Boise cities, and half way, or about 200 miles, from those said capitals of Idaho and Utah. North of it, and distant 50 miles, though seeming closely near, the Salmon river mountains show their shining peaks, gray with the cares of countless ages. East and west of it, as far as the eye can see, the sagebrush prairie loads the desert air with its wild perfume. Southerly the great Salt Lake, 100 miles away, is hidden by the Goose Creek mountains.

The river, about 200 yards in width, coming slowly from the southeast, overtowered by perpendicular walls of basaltic rock, over 800 feet high, suddenly expands into a basin of twice its width, and there is divided into a half dozen streams, by dark looking rocks which raise their gloomy crests above the sparkling surf of the maddened waters. Every stream rushes over a fall of thirty feet, and every fall is of a different shape, seeming fanciful and fluctuating, yet physically fixed, as they have ever been while centuries like shadows have flown over them. The river resuming its course is again divided and takes a second tumble of sixty feet still further, but this time by only three different streams. Three falls are the result; one on each side, unbroken and falling in solid sheets; the central one being formed by seven fan-shaped steppes of rock. From the one of these benches to the other underneath, the water falls in a smooth, transparent sheet, forming a cascade unsurpassed in the world, and contrasting strangely, by its dark, transparent color, with the rustling, roaring, foaming streams surrounding it both above and at the sides. The river becomes once more smooth and dark in color. Its banks suddenly jut out from both sides, narrowing the channel to 400 feet; and through this gap the confined mass of water precipitates in one whole volume, without break or hindrance into an ominous abyss almost 300 feet in depth. No pen can describe this scene. This is in reality the "Great Fall," and is well worthy of its name, leaping as it does from the loom of nature like a colossal sheet of silver.

Forming a slight horse-shoe, its central waters appear blue until they meet the spray that rises ever heavenward from the foot of the foaming cataract. The sides are frayed into foam, and remind one of the pictured avalanches in the Alps. Right on the edge of the fall stands a lone pillar of gray sandstone, on whose summit, undisturbed by the whiz of water or the fear of fate fast yawning on their eyrie, a pair of bald-headed eagles have built their nest, and are now rearing their young, secure in sight of the sublimity and solitude surrounding. The cataract's sound—but slightly heard above—is absolutely deafening as you reach the river's base, the roar of the falls confined, as it is, by the high walls of the canyon, rushing down the chasm and increasing in volume as it rolls, so as to be heard full 30 miles southwest. Close to the cataract is a square-shaped cave of 15 feet each side and 20 high, whose walls are supported by basaltic columns, the regularity of whose formation is unsurpassed by anything in the isle of Staffa or the Giant's causeway. Sliding out of this cave and falling about 8 feet on the grassy slope that leads to the waters' edge, within 200 feet of the foot of the falls, you are right in the middle of the mist, and wet through in an instant. It is here that, by looking up, the enormous altitude of the fall can be realized, and the first feeling is one of self-preservation, and an involuntary drawing back, for the whole mass seems ready to drop and crush you where you stand. Never can the weird beauty of this scene be forgotten by beholders. Rainbows of a thousand hues seem to surround you, and their irises to arch you in the skies.

The white foaming waters form a brilliant background to the magic prisms pictured by the spray. The dark, frowning rocks, relieved by the bright green junipers, make a fitting frame for this magnficent sight, second to none in point of volume as it is second to none in savage grandeur. As measured by officers of the 1st Oregon infantry; encamped adjoining, the main fall is 210 feet from the level to the edge of the water below. The upper falls have not yet been measured, but the total fall on the river, on the three distinct tumbles it takes, cannot be be less than 300 feet, while the river itself is over 400 feet at its narrowest width. The channel of the stream below the falls is a chasm 1,500 feet in width and 1,000 in depth, with perpendicular walls of rock inclosing it.

A Good Paper to Edit.

If anybody wants to edit the Vicksburg Sentinel he will be edified by the followiug brief history of some of the men who have figured in that position:

Dr. James Hagan took hold in 1837; had a number of street fights, fought a duel with his brother editor of the Whig, Major McCardle, whom he wounded in the thigh, and was killed in '42, in a street fight by D. W. Adams. His assistant, Isaac C. Partridge, died of yellow fever in 1839. Dr. J. S. Fall, another assistant, had a number of street fights, in one of which he was badly wounded. James Ryan next editor, was killed by R. E. Hammett of the Whig. Next came Walter Hickey, who had several rows and was repeatedly wounded; he killed Dr. Macklin and was soon after himself killed in Texas; John Lavins, another editor was imprisoned for the violence of his articles. John Jenkins, his successor, was killed in the street by H. A. Crabbe; and Crabbe was murdered in Sonora. F. G. Jones succeeded Jenkins, but soon after drowned himself. More recently, W. D. Roy was killed while editing the paper, by his clerk.

A Long Story Briefly Told.

The following story will bear printing once in seven years—it is about that time since it went the rounds:

There was a certain king, who, like many eastern kings, was very fond of hearing stories told. To this amusement he gave up all his time; but yet he was never satisfied. All the exertions of his courtiers were in vain. The more he heard, the more he wanted to hear. At last he made a proclamation that if any man would tell him a story that would last forever, he would make him his heir, and give him the princess, his daughter, in marriage; but if any one should pretend he had such a story, but should fail—that is, if the story did come to an end—he was to have his head chopped off immediately.

For such a rich prize as a beautiful princess and a kingdom, many candidates appeared; and dreadful long stories some of them told. Some lasted a week, some a month, some six months. Poor fellows! They all spun them as long as they possibly could, you may be sure; but all in vain. Sooner or later they all came to an end, and, one after another, the unlucky story-tellers had their heads chopped off.

At last came a man who said that he had a story which would last forever, if his majesty would be pleased to give him a trial.

He was warned of his danger; they told him how many others had tried and lost their heads; but he said he was not afraid, and so he was brought before the king. He was a man of a very composed and deliberate way of speaking, and, after making all requisite stipulations for time for his eating drinking and sleeping, he thus began his story:

"O king! there was once a king who was a great tyrant. And, desiring to increase his riches, he seized upon all the corn and grain in his kingdom, and put it into an immense granary which he built on purpose, as high as a mountain.

"This he did for several years, till the granary was full up to the top. He then stopped up all the doors and windows, and closed it up fast on all sides.

"But the bricklayers had, by accident, left a small hole near the top of the granary, and there came a flight of locusts and tried to get at the corn; but the hole was so small that only one locust could pass through it at at a time. So one locust went in and carried off one grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn—"

He had gone on thus from morning till night (except while he was engaged at his meals) for about a month, when the king began to be rather tired of the locusts, and interrupted him with:

"Well, well, we have heard enough of the locusts; we will suppose they helped themselves to all the corn they wanted; tell us what happened afterward."

To which the story-teller answered, very deliberately:

"If it please your majesty, it is impossible to tell you what happened afterward before I tell you what happened first."

And then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn.

The king listened with unconquerable patience six months longer, when he again interrupted him with:

"O, friend! I am weary with your locusts! How soon do you think they will have done?"

To which the story-teller made answer: "O king! who can tell? At the time to which my story has come, the locusts have cleared away only a small space; it may be a cubit, each way around the inside of the hole, and the air is still dark with locusts on all sides. But let the king have patience, and, no doubt, we shall come to the end of them in time."

Thus encouraged, the king listened on for full another year, the story-teller going on as before: "And then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn, and then another locust went in and carried off another grain of corn," till at last the poor king could stand it no longer, and he cried out:

"Oh, man, that's enough! take my kingdom! take anything—everything! only let us hear no more of your abominable locusts!"

And so the story-teller was married to the king's daughter, and was declared heir to the throne; and nobody ever expressed a wish to hear the rest of the story, for he said it was impossible to come to the rest of his story until he had done with the locusts. The unreasonable caprice of the foolish king was thus over-matched by the ingenious device of the wise man.

The Child Murder.

Some time since we published an account of a preacher, at Medina, N. Y., who whipped his child to death, in the attempt to "break its will." A lady, writing from Medina to her son in Goshen, draws the following grapic picture of the horrible atrocity:

"You knew Joel Lindsley, I believe; well, a week ago last Monday night he whipped his little boy to death, because he would not say his prayers. He was a little child, between three and four years old, his mother died near three years ago, and Joel married Frank Nobles last spring. I think you knew her folks, they live out west of Ferbys. She went up stairs to put the little fellow to bed, and he refused to say his prayers, so she whipped him some, and went down and Joel went up, and whipped him two hours and a half, and then carried him down and told his wife he wished she would get up, for Johnny acted very strange, and he did n't know what was the matter with him; well, he died right away. Gilbert's wife went over and laid the little one out. Gilbert went to Millville next forenoon, and told that Joel's child was dead, and he did not know what killed the child, but that Joel had been correcting it. The neighbors went in and thought they acted strange. Wednesday morning he was to be buried. In the morning, when they were all ready, to their great surprise the Coroner made his appearance, to hold an inquest over the body. He had a jury of fifteen men. They were six hours making the examination. They say they never saw such a sight before, and asked Joel what he whipped the child with. He said a shingle, sometimes with the flat side and then with the edge; but, oh, such a sight! his little fingers were all in strings, the nails gone, and the bones broken, his legs all a jelly, and the bottom of his feet blistered, and pieces of flesh gone out of them, his shoulders and neck, and the sides of his head all black. They looked around and found a tub full of bloody clothes to soak; and the verdict was murder.

.....An old lady who had insisted on her minister's praying for rain, had her cabbages cut up by a hail storm, and on viewing the wreck, remarked, that she "never knew him undertake anything without overdoing the matter."

.....What is the difference between a piece of honeycomb and a black eye? One is produced by a laboring bee, and the other by a belaboring.

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK.

General Intelligence.

Mr. Browning is named as the successor of Secretary Harlan, in the event of the latter's resignation.

The resolution for the admission of Tennessee was adopted by the House on the 20th by a vote of 125 to 12.

Hon. E. B. Washburne continues so ill in Washington that his physicians have advised against his receiving visitors.

Freeman Clarke, Comptroler of the Currency, also sent in his resignation on the 16th, being unable to support the policy of the Executive.

General Dix has written a letter cordially approving the objects of the Philadelphia Convention, and promising to do all in his power to render the Convention a success.

The rebel General Forrest called at the White House on the 19th to see the President, but did not succeed in obtaining an interview.

The President, on the 20th, nominated to the Senate Henry Stanbery, of Kentucky, to be Attorney General of the United States, in place of Speed, resigned.

General Sheridan writes to the War Department that French reinforcements are constantly arriving in Mexico, and that he has little faith in Napoleon's promises to withdraw his troops from that country.

The Secretary of the Treasury has appointed to the new office of Commissioner of Revenue the Hon. A. Wells, now chairman of the U. S. Revenue Commission. This is believed to be almost the first instance in our political history where a new civil office has been created by Congress in order to retain the services of a particular individual, the bill having passed Congress only on the understanding that the appointment would be made as indicated.

Postmaster General Dennison has resigned his place in the Cabinet, not being able to agree with the President in some of his points of policy. The President has nominated ex-Governor A. W. Randall, of Wisconsin, now First Assistant Postmaster General, to succeed him, but the Senate Postoffice Committee stand three to three on the question of recommending his confirmation. It is said that, in case of his rejection, the President will appoint Montgomery Blair, which, it is thought, will prompt favorable action on Mr. Randall, as the lesser of the two evils.

The War Department has ordered, at the instance of the President, that all persons who are undergoing sentence by military courts, and have been imprisoned six months, except those who are under sentence for the crimes of murder, arson, and rape, and excepting those who are under sentence at the Tortugas, be discharged from imprisonment, and the residue of their sentence remitted. Those who belong to the military service, and their term unexpired, will be returned to their command if it is still in the service; and their release is conditioned upon their serving their full term and being of good behavior.

It is said that something very important is about to transpire at Washington in reference to Mexican affairs. Secretary Seward's messenger has just returned from New York, where he has been specially to see Gen. Ortega, with instructions from the Secretary. He was dispatched with instructions to ask Gen. Ortega if, in the event of our Government recognizing him as the legal President of Mexico, and forming a treaty with him, he would consent to make Santa Anna the Commander-in-Chief of the Mexican army. It is known that the messenger saw Ortega, but it has not transpired what reply he made to the question.

Foreign News.

The Italian Government is fitting out two monitors, under the auspices of a late officer in the United States navy.

A new naturalization law has been promulgated, which gives any foreigner the right to become a citizen of Mexico in twenty-four hours after his arrival, by renouncing his allegiance to his native country, and having some visible means of support.

The large American emigrant ship Monarch of the Seas, which sailed from Liverpool on the 19th of March last for New York, has been four months at sea, and fears are entertained that some direful disaster has overtaken her, and that she has gone to the bottom with all on board. She had six hundred and seventy-four passengers and a crew of fifty-four men, including officers. The vessel was valued at $125,000 and is fully insured.

European dates to the 6th are of the highest importance. After a series of brilliant, but comparatively unimportant, because indecisive, Prussian successes in Bohemia, in the course of which the Austrians lost heavily, both in numbers and prestige, a decisive battle was fought on the 3d, near Sudowa, a village of Bohemia, in which the entire grand armies on both sides were engaged. Field Marshal Benedek commanded the Austrians, and Frederick William led the Prussians in person. The Prussians obtained a complete victory, driving the Austrians from the field in confusion, and capturing some 14,000 prisoners. On the following day, Field Marshal Von Gablenz came in person within the Prussian lines, bearing a flag of truce, the purport of which is not telegraphed.

Content with her semblance of success in Venetia, Austria has accepted the suggestion of Napoleon, and proposed to cede Venetia to France, and accept Napoleon's mediation, which the latter has accordingly undertaken, and has already communicated with the Kings of Prussia and Italy, proposing an armistice. The cession of Venetia is made in reality to Italy, although it is done though France, in order to avoid the appearance of surrender, on the part of Austria, under compulsion, to an armed enemy. It is stated that, in London commercial circles, peace is regarded as virtually concluded. A Congress of Powers is considered probable, when France will propose a general disarmament. Since the days of the first Napoleon, history shows no grand campaign so brilliant, and so important in its results, as that with which Prussia has opened, and, it seems probable, virtually concluded, the war in which she so precipitately engaged.....Lord Derby has announced the new ministry, which had been approved by the Queen. He succeeds Russell as Premier, and leader in the House of Lords; Disraeli succeeds Gladstone as Chancellor of the Exchequer, and leader in the Commons; Stanley is named Secretary of Foreign, and Walpole of Home Affairs; General Peel is Secretary of War, and Packington First Lord of the Admiralty; Lord Northcote is President of the Board of Trade, and the Duke of Buckingham of the Council.

Advices to the 8th inst., by the Africa, state that Prussia and Italy finally accepted the proposal for an armistice, upon condition that the Prussian forces shall retain their present position, that Austria shall not increase her forces in the field, and that Italy shall occupy two of the fortresses of the Quadrilateral.....General Cialdini has crossed the Po, and the Austrians have withdrawn from the Italian side of the Mincio. .....The Prussians are pushing forward in Bohemia and the Austrians continue their retreat.....The Prussians and Bohemians have had an engagement, in which the latter were defeated.....In the battle on the 3d, the Austrians lost 20,000 prisoners and 116 guns.....Severe fighting is reported on the frontiers of Venetia and the Tyrol, the reports of results being contradictory..... It is believed that France will exchange Venetia for Sardinia.....The shore end of the Atlantic cable was laid on the 6th..... The cholera has broken out at St. Petersburg.

Will K. Speed, clerk of the steamer Gleaner, who was bound over at Memphis, in large sums, for putting two-cent stamps, instead of five-cent ones, on bills of lading, has been released; so many violations of the law occurring that it would be necessary to arrest a large number of cases. One hundred and thirty-one burial permits were granted in New York on the morrning of the 20th. The demand for hearses is so great that it cannot be supplied. Eight new cases of cholera were reported in that city on that day, of which two died. Six were reported in Brooklyn. Dr. Calhoun, Medical Inspector of Hart's Island, has the cholera, and is not expected to recover. There are many cases reported on that island.

The New York Commercial Advertiser says: "Facts show conclusively that the cholera now raging in certain portions of the city is the epidemic pursuing its incipient stages, beginning in regions most favorably disposed for its development. The facts in relation to the number of cases on Hart's Island were deemed so appalling that publicity was denied. Surgeon Calhoun, of that post, has died of cholera, and an able corps of physicians has been sent to that island, and also to Governor's Island."

The Great Sioux Sun Dance.

The Northwestern Indian Commission, consisting of Gov. Newton Edmunds, of Dacotah, Maj. Gen. S. R. Curtis, Hon. Orrin Guernsey, of Wisconsin, and Rev. H. W. Reed, of Iowa, assembled for the first time in full Board at Fort Sully, last month, and while assembled here, the Indians held what they term the great "Sun Dance," which is of so rare occurrence that persons who have spent a long term of years in the Indian country never witnessed it. A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune thus describes it:

Like all Indian dances, this consists of short, jerking, jumping motions by merely raising the heel, and as the drum commenced, with each stroke of the stick, they went up and down, uttering a sound with their whistle and holding in their hands some offering, stretched out toward the sun in solemn token of adoration. Occasionally, as nature seemed exhausted, they would stop and smoke, but no water or food could touch their lips and their rests were short, and soon the dance was resumed by the renewal of the hideous monotony of the drums. All day and all night the continued exercise was faithfully performed by all who could endure the toilsome exertions.

On the next day, June 1st, the services took a new form Each dancer was seated near the sacred centre pole to undergo graver tortures. Two operators, one with an awl, and the other with a butcher knife, were seated on either side. The one with the awl would pierce the skin and flesh of the arm, raising up a conical piece which the man with the butcher knife would cut about one-half or three-fourths of an inch long. These cuts were made in each arm in several places. Some had several above and several below each arm. The devotee must show no emotion, and it was surprising to see the fidelity and endurance exhibited in this regard. One uttered a mournful cry, but our interpreter informed me that these cries were only supplications or wishes devoutly made to the "Good Spirit." But many of the dancers were further tortured by cuts on the breast and back. The awl was thrust in and the flesh and skin raised, and a seton or cord, or stick of wood was thrust through. A cord or rope was attached to the stick, and the ropes were attached to the center pole. The dancer would pull on the ropes as he danced till the flesh and skin would tear out. This would sometimes take hours of dancing and much hard pulling, to tear away the strong flesh and tough skin. One who had two attached to his two breasts leaned back, dancing and pulling, till the flesh seemed to be drawn out three inches from his bones. Finally he leaned back, throwing nearly his whole weight before they tore out. The Indian painted black was the most intense performer. He had four of these setons arranged, two on his breast and two on his back, attached by four ropes to the pole above his head. He danced incessantly. In the afternoon he seemed much exhausted, but still, with eyes turned toward the sun, and uttering faint sounds with his whistle, he danced on, pulling at the ropes till he tore them all loose. But he looked pale and exhausted, and still without change of position or form, continued his weary performance. Another had four setons attached to the breast and back, and to the ropes were attached four old dry buffalo heads, including the pith of the horns. These heads so attached, were suspended so as to hang about his hips and shake as he danced in a vain effort to shake them off. Although they were large and probably would weigh twenty pounds, he continued to dance without tearing out the setons. Finally he gave a friend a horse to take them by the horns and tear them out.

As these victims thus displayed their heathenish fervor, their female friends came in and had their arms cut in several places, to show their devotional sympathy with their devotees. But the "Sun dance" which had thus continued more than twenty hours, and the whole exhibition three days, was finally concluded on the third day. The dancers, according to this ritual, gave away to their friends all their property, horses, tapes, robes and blankets. All had to be sacrificed. They had been somewhat annoyed and oppressed with heat in consequence of the great crowd of soldiers and others, who crowded around them, and this was given as the reason of the adjournment. But some of the dancers had really fell from exhaustion, and had been borne away by their friends; and at last accounts, when we left on the 12th, the man painted black was not expected to live. I doubt whether he will survive this terrible ordeal. The scene closed, leaving on my memory a picture of terrible superstition and sanguinary barbarity such as I hope never to witness again. I cannot narrate the facts so as to give an adequate idea of the ghastly horror of the exhibition, but the scene will never be effaced from my memory, and hundreds who witnessed it will bear testimony to its almost unheard of atrocity. The sad story of its cruelties attest their superstitious devotion in disregard of all the missionary efforts of our people.

—A large crowd was attracted at Jones' Wood, N. J., on the 4th to witness a man drive six trained geese, harnessed to a wash tub, across the river. A paddle was used to steer the tub and also to tap the geese on the head when disposed to leap out of harness.

He wears to the city delivery the only suit of clothes he has left.

—At Mobile, a few days ago, an inquest was held upon the body of Timothy Driscoll. The evidence before the jury was that Driscoll, who was a watchman, complained on Thursday night that he did not feel well, and the mosquitoes bothered him, and added that he was going where they would not disturb him. He had not been in good health for some time.

—The identical cannon which fired the first shot in the late rebellion, passed through Cairo on the 12th, in charge of four members of the 15th United States Regulars, en route for Washington. It is a six-pounder, with a smooth bore, and was used on Morris Island, in firing into the steamer Star of the West at the entrance of Charleston harbor on the 9th of January, 1861. It is an interesting rebel relic to be added to the many already at Washington.

When the colt was discovered at the coat it had eaten the pocket-book and about $130 of the money, and the balance of the money was found lying on the ground.

—A surprising instance of superstition and ingratitude is recorded in the New York papers. A boy bathing near one of the wharves seemed about to drown, when he was rescued by a noble Newfoundland dog. In dragging the boy from the water by the hair, the teeth of the animal inflicted some scratches on the child's head. The parents of the child immediately applied for and procured an order to have the dog killed, on the ground that should the quadruped at any subsequent time go mad, the biped would be injuriously affected.

He finally renewed the acquaintance of his first wife, and the result was that he has now led her to the altar for the second time.

—A little boy met with a shocking death in the town of Shirley, Massachusetts, a few days since. He was, with others, attending school, near which was a sand bank, into which the children dug holes; into one of these holes they thoughtlessly caused this boy to enter, when they closed or filled up the entrance and left him. The teacher soon after made inquiries for the missing boy, when she was informed by those knowing the cause of his absence, that they had buried him in the sand bank, and which proved but too true; for upon removing the sand and dirt, the little fellow was found really dead, being actually buried alive.

—Further searches into the cave discovered a few weeks ago near Nashville, disclose the skeletons of thirteen more Indians, one of whom, supposed to be a chief, had gold bands valued at twelve hundred dollars round his hands, fingers, legs, and neck. A hatchet composed of copper, weighing 11 pounds was discovered, which was so hardened as to cut bar iron without the slightest dent. More gold and other valuable articles have been found. The owner of the cave keeps the location of it a profound secret from the Nashville folks, as he wishes to explore it completely before any disclosures are made.

—Referring to the case of the child murdering clergyman, the Albion, N. Y., American of the 12th says the story which was circulated in the papers that Lindsley, after being admitted to bail had returned and given himself up the Sheriff and to insure safety and to escape violence at the hands of his neighbors, is without foundation in fact. He did, a few days after his release, consult with his counsel as to the propriety of such a course, but was dissuaded from doing it. The report that Lindsley had fled to Canada is also false. He is at home in Shelby, where he will remain until the time arrives for his indictment and trial, which will be at the next session of the criminal court in September.

—The Salt Lake Vidette, still continuing its war on the Mormon monstrosity at the Saint's Rest tells us how Brigham Young's financial matters are carried on, and how the faithful are regularly shorn of the fruits of their labor. According to his laws, when a man joins his church, one-tenth of all his property has to go to the support of it, and one-tenth of all the annual profits of the remainder. If the man has no property, one-tenth of his labor has to go to the church; one-tenth of every trade or occupation has to be represented; and if a man should be idle thirty days, the tithing man claims the profits of three days labor, on the ground that no one has a right to idle away three days belonging to the Lord.

—Thirwall, arrested for the murder of James Houseman, at Cookstown, Pa., has confessed his guilt, and says that the wife of Houseman instigated the deed. The confessor states that the victim was sleeping on a sofa. Just before he was shot, Houseman drew a long breath, or sigh. His wife, who was sitting on the bed at the time, grabbed hold of him, drew him across the bed, and let him bleed in a tub. She then took an old piece of quilt and wrapped it around his head. She said, "Jim couln't do much as he was nearly played out." When he was quite dead the body was removed across the street, about twenty feet wide, and rolled down the precipitous bank into the river. A rope was tied around his neck, and to the other end was attached an iron axle tree that sunk him. Next morning she sent out her eldest boy to hunt his pap, but when he returned, saying he could not find him, she remarked that he would be back directly.

MR. GEORGE BRUCE, the well known and respected type founder, died at his residence in New York on Thursday last, at the age of 85.

AT the commencement of the Jesuit's College in Georgetown, D. C., Robert M. Douglas, a son of the "Little Giant," delivered an oration on the death of Hannibal.

AT the the celebration of the Fourth at Philadelphia, Maj. Gen. Meade was presented by the Union League of that city with a gold medal. The medal is composed of the finest of gold, and weighs one pound and a half. On the obverse side is a finely executed head of the hero of Gettysburg.

GEORGE PEABODY has accepted an invitation to visit Zanesville, Ohio, before he returns to Europe. Among his latest deeds is the gift of $50,000 apiece to his four nephews in this country. One of them, Mr. Arthur Peabody, was formerly the "local" of the Zanesville Courier.

HON. JOEL EASTMAN of Conway, N. H., is at Salisbury, on a visit to his mother now in her eleventh decade. When on a visit to her a year or two ago, on leaving he said he might never see her again. "Why," (was the interogatory of the venerable lady,) "you are not about to die, are you Joel?"

CARROZZI ZUCCHI, the prima donna, found the revenue officers wanted her income tax on the $40,000 in gold she received last year. The tuneful Tuscan suddenly discovered that she had business in Europe, but was overhauled on shipboard. She paid the tax finally in a fine melodramatic gust of passion.

THE New York Evening Post overhauled Mr. Darling, M. C., for saying in the House, in pronouncing a eulogy on Mr. Humphrey, that "his gentlemanly spirit winged its way to its Maker." It turns out that what Darling really did say was, that "without a struggle or a groan the gentle, manly spirit of James Humphrey was wafted into the presence of his Maker."

HENRY WARD BEECHER has lately been pitching into the practice of working railroad conductors and drivers on Sunday. The other day, Mr. Beecher, in his peculiar way, was making inquiries of a Brooklyn conductor, to whom he was unknown, as to whether the Sunday riding could not be broken up. "I think it might be," said the conductor, "but for that confounded fellow, Beecher. So many fancy people, from all parts, visit his establishment, that it makes the road profitable. If he would only shut up, the thing could be done."

THE LOWELL family are about as promising as the Beechers. Prof. J. Russell Lowell is known to every one. His brother, the Rev. R. T. S. Lowell, is the author of a very successful novel, "The New Priest," and Mrs. Mary Lowell Putnam has proved herself to be fully their equal in both prose and poetry.

STEPHEN H. BRANCH has taken a colored partner and commenced the publication of a small sheet in New York, called the Resurrectionist. The black man parades the streets of that city with a basket on his arm full of papers, and a placard suspended from his neck on which is inscribed: "This is the partner of Stephen H. Branch."

AL WEIDMAN owns an interest in the German Demokrat of Pittsburgh, of which one Mr. Kuhn is editor. The proprietor was surprised to read, a few days ago, an article in his own paper in which he was denounced as a pettifogging lawyer, unworthy of confidence or esteem. He proceeded to cowhide Kuhn, and the matter goes to the courts.

INFORMATION has been received from Mare Island Navy Yard, California, that Samuel Welles, Constructing Engineer of that yard, was fatally injured on the 10th instant by the explosion of a boiler, and died at 7 P. M. of that day. He was a nephew of the Secretary of the Navy. He was on the point of returning East to be married when the event occurred.

A HARTFORD woman, wife of a modest mechanic, Eli Walker, has fallen heir to the immense fortune of thirty-five millions of dollars by the death of some relative in England. Ex-Governor T. A. Seymour has been employed to investigate the case, and the result is that documents have been received which show beyond a question that she will come in possession of this immense property.

FARNARD EISENUTH died on the 22d ult. at New Castle, Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania, aged over 111. The day of his birth is not known, but he was baptised while an infant on the 10th of May, 1755. His wife died in 1848 at the age of 95. Until the age of 105, he worked regularly in the field. A fall at the time lamed him and considerably impeded his labor out of doors, though his health continued good until near the period of his death.

A LONDON letter says: "Queen Victoria is never cheered when she visits London now-a-days. The remark is, that 'the people have forgotten how to cheer.' She frequently visits town, but her carriages are permitted to pass in silence. The people are either alienated or chilled in their feelings toward her. On her birthday, a few days since, I was struck with the faintness and stinginess of the illumination. She does many eccentric things, to which allusion is made in the papers in a very covert and veiled manner. For instance, The Star for June 4th refers to the Queen's recent visit to the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland at Cliefden: 'The visit to Cliefden was, it is stated, a sudden inspiration, and unexpected by the Duke and Duchess, who had invited a party to stay there during the races.'"

Foreign Gossip.

—It is stated that Queen Victoria sends a telegraphic dispatch every morning to the King of Prussia, containing commonly only these words: "God guide you for the best."

—The 187th of the group of asteroids was discovered on the night of June 16, at Madras, India. The new planet has been named Sylvia. It can only be detected by very powerful telescopes.

—Queen Victoria remarked, recently, "Alice (her daughter) is ruined; for Hesse has ceased to exist. I have written for her to come over here; unless she do so, there is nothing left for her to do but to go to some cheap place in Switzerland, and live as economically as she can."

—The device of the House of Hapsburg is the five vowels, A, E, I, O, U, which the Emperor Frederick III, chooses to interpret; "Austria Erit Imperatrix Omnis Universi." Austria will be the empress of the whole world. In the course of the war, Austria will probably have often to make use of the very common device of simple "I O U."

—The detailed accounts of the fighting in Germany, contained in the correspondence of the English papers, attribute the remarkable success of the Prussians to the superiority of their arms. The needle gun, in particular, is mentioned as being very effective. A military correspondent, who saw the fighting at Podoli, says that the Austrians who fell under the fire of infantry as compared to the Prussians, 6 to 1.

—The disease called febris nigra, or Black death, has appeared in Ireland. Four cases occurred lately in Dublin, and an inquest has just been held on an artisan in Belfast, who, when dying, had deep blotches and black marks over his body, as if (said the surgeon who had attended him) he had been fired at from a short distance with a blank catridge. The spots were raised above the level of the skin, and could be quite sensibly felt. Death in this instance was accelarated by drinking. Febris nigra has heretofore been almost entirely unknown in Ireland.

—A letter from a Brazilian officer describes some of the beauties of soldiering in South America: "Amphibious creatures abound. In my own tent I have already killed four snakes. Every morning I find myself accompanied by a body guard of fifteen or twenty monstrous toads, which have frequently spent the night under the corners of the hides that serve me as a bed. Enormous aligators promenade regularly from lake to lake every night. In a Major's tent, the other day, one was killed that measured six feet in length, and an unfortunate Brazilian soldier was unexpectedly taken off his legs by one of these horrible creatures and carried into the nearest lake."

—It is stated as a striking instance of the forethought displayed in the Prussian military preparations, that not only had the War Office obtained the exact measurement of the Saxon railway bridges, but had actually had the timber required for their reconstruction already prepared and fitted before the beginning of the war. As soon, therefore, as the Saxons had destroyed them, three hundred carpenters were sent off from Berlin with the necessary materials, and had nothing more to do than to put them together.

—The London tea merchants give each year a prize of $5,000 to the ship that brings the first new tea to England. Of course there is great competition among the vessels, and this year no less than ten clippers are to start from Hong Kong and race all the way to England. Last year the clipper ship Fiery Cross won the race. She and the Taeping sailed from Hong Kong, around the Cape of Good Hope, and into the English Channel, side by side, when the wind failed, and the fiery Cross, procuring a tug, beat her competitor a few hours, accomplishing the voyage in eighty-nine days.

—It is stated in an English paper that at a late banquet a reporter was sitting directly behind Mr. Disraeli, "taking him down" in a reportorial sense. The reporter missed an important sentance, and somewhat audibly expressed his annoyance. Mr. Disraeli, on this, hesitated in true Parliamentary style, and very quickly repeated the dropped sentence. No one but the grateful reporter knew why he did so. This delicate compliment to the usefulness of reporters is worthy of record, for the great orator was aware that while assisting an individual to perform his task, he was also doing a service to the million of readers who were to be benefited through the medium of the reporter's pencil and the press.

The Crosby Opera House Art Association.

The Great Chicago Enterprise.

Not only have artists and all lovers of art in America manifested an extraordinary interest in the success of this worthy enterprise—and not only have our most prominent, wealthy and influential citizens heartily indorsed the project by giving it the sanction and prestige of their names and personal influence, but the men who represent in the West the immense business interest of our Express lines are taking prompt action in the matter, and in such a practical, thoroughly business like way as will best aid the furtherance and successful consummation of the object to be attained. The plan set forth in the following circular from the Express Agents and Offices located in this city, furnishes ample evidence of the general confidence reposed in the management of the Association, and offers to every one a rare opportunity for taking stock in a company whose united capital will control a large amount of subscriptions and consequently engross a greater share of the probabilities of success in the final drawing:

To the Agents of Express Companies:

The undersigned, representing in Chicago the principal Express Companies, cordially subscribe to the correctness of the statement in the circular of the "Crosby Opera House Art Association," as to the magnitude, architectural beauty, eligible location and immense cost and value of the Crosby Opera House, in this city.

The mercantile and general business occupancy of this stately edifice, (apart from accommodations for artists' studios, and galleries of sculpture and paintings,) is already yielding a large income; which is likely to increase, as real estate, in the immediate neighborhood, is growing rapidly in value for trade uses. Costing $600,000, it would command more than half that sum at auction.

For superior material and thoroughness, the Crosby Opera House construction will compare with the most substantial and elegant public buildings any where in the world. Certainly it is one of which Americans—especially the people of the West—have reason to be proud.

Regarding it as the duty of every citizen of Chicago to do what he so easily can to compensate Mr. Crosby, and believing that every American, who has any public spirit and fine taste, will cheerfully cooperate in the enterprise by which the originator and proprietor of this great master-piece of architectural skill is to regain some part, at least, of the fortune devoted to its construction, we heartily indorse his appeal to the entire public, and commend "The Crosby Opera House Art Association" to the favor and patronage of every community, North, South, East and West, with which the Express Companies communicate.

CIRCULAR FROM THE EXPRESS OFFICES.

To the Express and Telegraph Men of America:

The undersigned, employees of the Express and Telegraph Companies in Chicago, would respectfully invite our brethren throughout the entire country to unite with us in the club which we have initiated for the purchase of 2,000 certificates (more or less) in the Crosby Art Association, under the title of "The Express and Telegraph Club."

The terms of admission to this Club are assent to its conditions and the payment of $5.00, equivalent to the price of a certificate in the Crosby Opera House Art Association.

Every $5.00 invested by any person in this Club shall entitle him to one of the first class steel engravings offered by the Crosby Opera House Art Association. It shall also entitle him to a proportionate interest in the total amount of premiums which may fall to the lot of "The Express and Telegraph Club," in the distribution, commencing the first day of October next, by the Crosby Opera House Art Association.

The object is to have the "Express and Telegraph Club" hold so large a number of certificates in the Crosby Art Association as shall materially increase the probability of drawing the Crosby Opera House, in which the Club becomes a joint stock company, in which every certificate purchased by the Club would be represented, or its members might vote to dispose of it again, either by lot amongst themselves or at public auction, together with any other prizes which shall have accrued to the Club.

No one will be admitted to the Club whose subscription shall not have come to the hand of the Treasurer, O. Barrett, Agent of the American Express office in Chicago, prior to the 29th day of September next.

Be careful to have your remittance duly way-billed at the express office; but send it free of charges, as the Club cannot incur any expense either for freight or commissions. Inclosed, also, send ten cents for tubing your engraving.

Until you shall have received the Club certificate, the express way-bill from your locality will show that you have made the payment requisite to membership.

We have every reason to believe that the grand distribution of prizes by the Crosby Opera House Art Association will be conducted with entire good faith and fairness; but we mean to be personally satisfied by being present to look after the interests of our Club.

Immediately after the drawing, the members of the Express and Telegraph Club will be informed of the result, and notified of a meeting to take action in the matter. The absent members may vote by proxy.

Every express and telegraph office will be supplied with programmes and blank forms of application. Inquiries for information may be addressed to the Corresponding Secretaries, viz: H. J. Colvin, United States Express office, Chicago; John R. Floyd, American Express office, Chicago, and R. C. Rankin, Agent Western Union Telegraph Company, Chicago.

All remittances of money or membership must be sent by express duly way-billed, addressed to Mr. O. W. Barrett, American Express office, Treasurer of the Express and Telegraph Club, or to either of the Corresponding Secretaries, as per form furnished herewith.

[Of course, membership in this club will not debar any one from purchasing certificates independently in the main Association, and these may be had of A. L. Stimson, purchasing Agent of the express companies in Chicago]

Upper Mississippi Scenes.

A party of ladies and gentlemen recently enjoyed an excursion trip to St. Paul on one of the splendid boats of the Northwestern Union Packet Company. The editor of the Dubuque Herald was one of the number who thus alludes to the rare scenic pleasures of the Upper Mississippi:

"And so it was that they enjoyed the trip, by daylight gazing upon the rugged and even hills now towering into mountains and again falling into glens and valleys, here broken and picturesque, presenting only sharp and broken outlines, and there smoothed into straight lines and glassy regularity, clothed always in nature's delicious green; and when evening came there were bright stars, one by one, modestly yet brilliantly peering out in the upper vaults to find their counterparts in the water beneath; and there were gorgeous sunsets, and many tinted pictures of river and hill, glen and glade, green trees and blue sky, whose images were marvelously reflected in the still bosom of the waters; and there were silvery hues above and silvery shades reflected below, and golden tints in the upper deep were faithfully copied by the lower deep, and the line between the waters and the sky formed the colors above and below so evenly brilliant and lovely that it found no resting place.

And, too, when nature no longer made our happy party joyous, there was sweet, soft music, and then came dancing, and

"Fairy footsteps pattered here and there
And joy and gladness everywhere."

Pacific Railroad of Missouri.

By a completion of the western extension of the Missouri Pacific Railroad from Kansas City to Leavenworth, a continuous rail line from St. Louis is now opened to that important point. Two through trains run daily from St. Louis to Kansas City and Leavenworth without change of cars. By the recent addition of new and elegant sleeping cars to the night trains of this road, passengers will find a journey to the interior of Kansas as comfortable as it is direct.

The Union Pacific Railroad (the immediate continuation of the Missouri Pacific) is now finished 107 miles beyond Kansas City, and daily passenger and freight trains pass over the line. This national work is being pushed at the rate of one mile and a half a day, and it is confidently expected cars will be running to Fort Riley by the 1st of September next.

DR. DADD recommends, as the best remedy for fleas on domestic animals, the use of a few drops of pennyroyal. When the fleas are very numerous it will be better to bathe the animal in an infusion of the herb.

HOGS will feed better and cheaper few in a sty, say about two, as they will eat their food more leisurely, keep quiet and contented; whereas when many are together, they seem to forget even common respect for their companions, and rush frantically to the trough, eat rapidly, knock one another about, beat off the weaker portion, waste the feed, and keep up a general excitement. —*Cor. WEEDS.—The microscope reveals the fact that every stem and twig as large as a quill contains some ten thousand little tubes, through which the water or sap is constantly passing upward during growth, to the leaves above, which spread it out by means of their fine net-work, and give it in the form of vapor to the air. With ten weeds upon a square foot, an exchange estimates that the careless farmer has forty-four million pumps at work on every acre, dissipating the moisture and drying up the soil at the expense of the crops. Boys, are the weeds pumping your fields at this rate?

CHICKENS should hatch on the 21st day, or a few hours later at the furthest. Save removing the empty shells, do not interfere with the nest for twenty-four hours; then put the mother and her brood into a coop; feed with oatmeal and paring meal, equal parts, mixed with water, into a crumbling state, or bread soaked in milk and squeezed dry; give the chicks twice daily a little water to drink, but do not leave it beside them. Some writers on poultry advise the removal of the little scale from the tip of the chicken's bill, but this practice is as cruel as it is necessary.

GESTATION OF ANIMALS.—M. Tessier, who for a period of many years, was Superindent of Experimental Farm established under an auspices of the French Government at Paris, found that of 582 mares, the shortest period was 287, and the longest 419 days—exhibiting the surprising difference of one hundred and thirty-two days! Another author observes that the most conclusive and satisfactory experiment on record, is that instituted by order of Lord Spencer, in which the period of gestation in no less than 764 cows, was accurately ascertained. From this it appears that the shortest period in which a live calf was produced was 220 day; but no calf produced under 242 days could be reared. The longest period of gestation was given in the Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society it appears that 314 cows calved before the 284th day, and 310 calved after the 285th day, so that the probable period of gestation in this useful animal may be fixed at 284 or 285 day. The average period of gestation in the ewe is given by a German author, as 161 days and that of the sow as 143

PREPARING BUTTER FOR MARKET.—We feel called upon to again protest against the manner in which much of the butter is prepared for sale. Our attention has been very frequently called to the matter within a few weeks. We see a lot of butter brought in, in rolls, looking very nice perhaps, but upon examination we notice one or two rolls are perfectly fresh, the buttermilk still in, and the salt not worked through. The parties offering it seem at first to take pride in it, as being so fresh, and when objections are raised to such, as not being in proper condition to sell, are quite indignant.

Another complaint made of the great mass of our Western butter, is' the quality and quantity of salt used. Very many use the common boiled salt, much of which is quite coarse and unfit for butter. We believe that the dry ground Solar salt is much the best, and is prepared for that purpose. When worked through, a greater quantity can be used than the other, without being offensive to the taste, as it dissolves and is embodied in the butter, while the other being in large particles, it does not dissolve, and when used is disagreeable to the taste. The kind used mostly by Eastern dairymen, is the ground Ashton or Liverpool salt. We hope our Farmers' Clubs will agitate this subject, and learn why prime Western butter should be quoted 30 to 50 per cent. less than New York State butter in the city of New York.—Northern Farmer.

FAIRBANKS' STANDARD SCALES.—In the year 1830, the Messrs. Fairbanks commenced the manufacture of Hay Scales. Additional improvements were made from time to time, and modifications adopted with reference to the wants and conveniences of the commercial, manufacturing and agricultural community. At the present time the annual consumption of the leading materials used is 3,000 tons pig iron, 200 tons scroll and bar iron, 40 tons cast steel, 30 tons copper, and 1,000,000 feet of lumber. The monthly pay-roll is about $15,000.

The Scales of this manufacture are known and used all over the country, and their accuracy so well established, that the "Fairbanks" stamp on the beam of a Scale has become to be a guarantee of excellence.—Boston Commercial.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS AS A GENERAL ASSISTANT OF NATURE.

What is health? What is disease?

Health is when the supply and expenditure are equal. Disease when the supply and expenditure are unequal.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS impart certain expulsive powers to all matters in the body whose life is below the standard of the surrounding parts, or which have remained longer than the time nature designed. So in fevers and all that class of cases which soon run into mortification, BRANDRETH'S PILLS have marvelous curative qualities. Our bodies are continually changing, and it is by this change we live. Should matter remain in organs beyond the time nature designed, pain and inflammation set in, which is nothing more than a reparatory effort for our good. All Brandreth's Pills are supposed from their results to do, is simply ASSISTING THESE EFFORTS OF NATURE.

DR. SWAIN'S VEGETABLE HAIR BALM invariably restores grey hair to its original color, without staining the skin or clothing. It leaves the most dry, dead and crisp hair, soft, moist and glossy, causes it to curl, and keeps it in its place, while it promotes its growth and prevents its falling off.

It contains neither oil or alcohol.

Numerous preparations of oil, alcohol and sulphur have been palmed upon the public, and having totally failed to give satisfaction, the manufacturers have deservedly come to grief.

Dr. Swain warrants his Vegetable Balm to accomplish all that he claims for it, and authorizes his agents to refund the money wherever it fails to give satisfaction.

It is an entirely new and scientific preparation, produced by the distilation of rare and fragrant flowers, which renders it not only the best renewer in the world, but makes it particularly agreeable as a hair dressing to both old and young, while its liquid purity and floral odor are in striking contrast with the nasty mixtures usually sold.

The proprietor has letters from many of the most distinguished as well as fashionable people, judges, clergymen, lawyers, physicians, opera singers, actresses, &c, certifying to the remarkable virtues of the Balm.

Don't let any dealer urge upon you a different article, but if your tradesman does not keep this, send one dollar for a trial bottle to the nearest agent, or the proprietor.

The Great Acclimating Tonic.

Wherever HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS, the celebrated American preventive of Climatic Diseases, have been introduced into unhealthy regions, their effects in sustaining the health, vigor and animal spirits of those whose pursuits subjected them to extraordinary risks from exposure and privation, have been wonderful. In the Army the superiority of this article over every other invigorating and alterative medicine has become so manifest where used, that it is relied upon, exclusively, as a protection against Bilious Fever, Fever and Ague, and Bowel Complaints of every kind. The soldiers say it is the only stimulant which produces and keeps up a healthy habit of body in unwholesome locations. For the unacclimated pioneer and settler it is the most reliable of all safeguards against sickness. Throughout the United States it is considered the most healthful and agreeable of all tonics, and altogether unequaled as a remedy for Dyspepsia. The medicinal ingredients are all vegetable, and are held in solution by the most wholesome stimulant known—the Essence of Rye. "Hostetter's Bitters" are manufactured at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and no less than 50,000 dozen bottles are sold annually by druggists.

Farmers, Families, and others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr. Tobias' Venetian Liniment for dysentery, colic, croup, chronic rheumatism, sore throat, toothache, sea-sickness, cuts, burns, swellings, bruises, old sores, headache, mosquito bites, pains in the limbs, chest, back, &c. If it does not give relief, the money will be refunded. All that is asked is a trial, and use it according to the directions.

DR. TOBIAS—Dear Sir: I have used your Venetian Liniment in my family for a number of years, and believe it to be the best article for what it is recommended that I have ever used. For sudden attack of the croup it is invaluable. I have no hesitation in recommending it for all the uses it professes to cure. I have sold it for many years, and it gives entire satisfaction. CHAS. DR. BELL'S GOLDEN TONIC STOMACH BITTERS.—Nine-tenths of the bitters in market are simply a mixture of cheap drugs and bad gin or whiskey. Dr. Bell's preparation is an exception, and as a tonic for the relief of fever and ague, dyspepsia, and nervous debility it is without a rival. It will shortly be introduced to this market by the manufacturers, Messrs Coleman & Silver, of Chicago.

Loss by Portland Fire. July 4.

The total amount oovered by Etna Policies on property destroyed or damaged is $296,854, on which salvade will be about 5 per cent. Our total loss will not vary much from $200,000, and is being promptly adjusted and paid. This sum is 5 per cent. upon the assets, a figure but slightly exceeding our government and State taxes paid last year, or a proportion equal to a $5000 loss for a company of $100,000 assets.

The necessity for insurance and the value of wealthy strong corporations, is forcibly illustrated by this fire. Several weak Insurance Company are destroyed.—Portland has a population of 35,0000;—was handsomely built, mostly fine brick or stone structures—protected and screened with upwards of 3000 shade tress—bounded on three sides by water—indeed, literally, almost rising from the ocean—and with a steam fire department—yet it has $10,000,000 worth of property consumed in a few hours—upon a holiday when its people are least occupied—from the very insignificant cause of a contemptible fire cracker.

Remember the trifling origin of fires that sweep away in a few hours the earnings of years. consider your best interests and give the Ætna agent a call if you need proper Insurance security. Policies issued at fair terms.

DR. VELPAU'S FRENCH PILLS.

Ladies, take Particular Notice.

THE REAL VELPAU FEMALE PILL.

[WARRANTED FRENCH.]

THESE PILLS, so celebrated many years ago in Paris for the relief of female irregularities, and afterward so notorious for their criminal employment in the practice of abortion, are now offered for sale for the first time in America. They have been kept in comparative obscurity from the fact that the originator, Dr. Velpau, is a physician in Paris of great wealth and strict conscientious principles, and has withheld them from general use, lest they should be employed for unlawful purposes. In overcoming Female Obstructions, Falling of the Womb, Whites, Green Sickness, Suppression, Retention, or Immoderate Flow of the Monthly Discharges, they seem to be truly omnipotent, bursting open the flood-gates from whatever cause may have stopped them; but they are offered to the public only for legitimate uses, and all agents are forbidden to sell them when it is understood that the object is unlawful. Married ladies should never take them when there is any reason to believe themselves pregnant, for they will be sure to produce a miscarriage.

These pills are entirely safe under all circumstances, being composed entirely of substances from the vegetable kingdom.

Each box has the coat of arms for the City of Paris stamped on the box, with the words "Trade Mark" in French, to counterfeit which is a misdemeanor, and all persons will be dealt with according to law.

☞ Full directions accompany every box.

Ladies can obtain a box sealed from the eyes of the curious, by inclosing One Dollar and six post-office stamps to any respectable druggists, or to O. G. STAPLES, General Agent for the United States, Watertown, N. Y.

☞ Cholera in Tecumseh.—No doubt our citizens will be surprised to learn that the Collar-ry has already arrived in Tecumseh—but judging from the almost daily arrivals of paper collars at Ketcham's Book Store we should judge that there had been several severe attacks—The favorite brands are Gray's Moulded, and the celebrated I. X. L. Call and see them.

☞ Beware of summer complaint amongst children. Thousands of little ones annually die from dis rders of the stomach and bowels, and many, ah! too many homes are rendered desolate by the hands of this prevalent disorder. HILLSDALE, MICH.—A Business College unequalled in its advantages by any similar institution in the country, except at Oberlin, O, will be opened in the above place, September 26, 1866.

Young men living in either Michigan or Indiana, will be particularly interested in this splendid new College.

☞ There is no soap that will begin to compare with the J. Monroe Taylor Gold Medal Soap, and probably no other manufacturer begins to expend one half as much money to make it worthy of the community, and the maker is richly deserving the patronage bestowed on him. It is a God-send to the world, and all who use it will agree with us that what we say is true.

☞ Work has been commenced on the foundation walls of the new Corner Block and it will now be prosecuted with vigor. It is the intention of the Company to put up the walls and enclose the building before cold weather sets in.

☞ Charles H. Smith of Ridgeway, aged 60 years, being indisposed on the 30th of July, obtained of Dr. D. W. Loree the first medical prescription he ever took.

Ridgeway, Aug. 6th, 1866.

Sec. of 'Tecumseh Club:'—The Barefoot nine of the 'Ridgeway Club,' do hereby challenge the second nine of your Club, for a match game of Base Ball to be played at Ridgeway, Friday Aug. 10 1866. ED. DEPUY,
Secretary of R. B. B. C.

☞ Politeness is not always the part of a Railroad man, but the Engineer of the "Antelope," which draws one of the passenger trains on the Branch is a perfect specimen of a gentlemen. Two or three times within as many weeks he has stopped the train down at Chicago street to allow some our citizens who were unfortunately too late for the cars, to get aboard. This was quite an inconvenience to the Engineer but a great accomodation to those who desired to take the train. This is not a matter of any great importance to be sure but at the same time is deserving of a complimentary notice. The man who is accomodating in small things is always accomodating in matters of graver importance.

Runaway.

Gentility to the ladies is the mark of a true gentlemen, but gentility sould be tempered with prudence. W. Hood a few days ago went to take a young lady out riding with his fathers team and carriage (we dont blame the young man a particle for that for we were frequently attacked with the same desire in our younger days) but as bad luck would have it, the lady could not close the gate, when she came out and our young friend as a matter of course left the buggy to close it for her. But while he was fastening the gate the horses left, and a large bill for a broken carriage was the penalty for his misguided politeness.

☞ We take pleasure in announcing to our numerous patrons that we have just received a new Gordon Job Press, of the latest style and most approved patern, and also several fonts of beautiful job type. Our facilities for job work are now unsupassed by any office in the County, and we are determined not to be excelled in that line. Those wishing job work done in the neatest style and at reasonable rates are invited to give us a call.

VALUABLE TO FARMERS.—The leaves of the alder, if strewn among corn or other grain when it is put into the bin, will effectually preserve it from the ravages of the weevil. The juce will also kill bedbugs and maggots. Insects never touch alder bushes. The leaves of the alder scattered over cabbages, cucumbers and other plants subject to the ravages of insects, will effectually shield them. The plum and other fruits may be saved by placing on the branches and among them bunches of alder leaves.

THE JACKSON DRUMMER BOY.—Mr. Robert Hendershott, of this city, popularly known as "The Drummer Boy of the Rappahannock," has now in preparation a history of his life from the time he entered the military service in 1861 to the present time. It will be a book of 200 pages.—Citizen.

"Bob," as he was familiarly known was formerly a resident of Tecumseh as many of our citizens will remember.—He received an appointment as Cadet at West Point by President Lincoln just before hit death, and now it appears he is preparing a history of his life. It will doubtless be very interesting and quite romantic.

NEW TELEGRAPH LINE.—The Jackson and Lansing Telegraph is now in working order and ready for business.—The first message passed over the wires yesterday. This new line supplies a desideratum which has long been felt here, and will prove very convenient to our merchants, and others who have business with the State capital.—Citizen.

We move that some body or some thing extend the line to Adrian. The man who would secure a telegraph from Jackson to Adrian would be reckoned a public benefactor along the line of the Branch.

☞ "Traps, Traps, Traps?"—Not any—we don't keep them—Have known people to get caught in them!

Important advice to Soldiers.

The new Bounty Law has passed and the Pension Law has been revised. All soldiers who served a term of three years, or who, having enlisted for three years, were discharged by reason of wounds received in the line of duty, and who have already received but one hundred dollars bounty are entitled to $100 additional bounty; also the widows, minor children and parents of such soldiers are entitled to a bounty of $100. By the revised Pension Law, widows, mothers and crippled soldiers are entitles to an increase of pension, and many, who have heretofore been unable to procure a pension owning to technicalities in the old law, are entitled to one under the amended act. All having such claims are invited to call immediately with their discharge papers upon S. C. STACY, who now has every facility for collecting such claims with promptness. Receipts given for discharge papers and all discharges carefully recorded in books kept for that purpose. Office with Judge Stacy, in Union Hall Block, Tecumseh, Michigan.

☞ A couple of boys named Elroy, aged 7 and 9 years, living near the Lenawee Junction were missed from home last week, and after considerable search they were found a few days after in Dundee Monroe county. They had run away from home and had traveled over Twenty miles thro' the woods and fields, sleeping in a cornfield one night, and picking up what they needed to eat. They were taken home by their parents and will not probably try the experiment again.

☞ The remains of old Mr. Harrison the father-in-law of Daniel Waring were found a few days since in a swamp two miles south of Adrian. Our readers will doubtless remember that Mr. Harrison left the poor house several weeks ago, and has not been heard from since. Diligent search was made for him but in vain, until at last a dead body was found in this swamp and was identified as Mr. Harrison's by the clothing.

☞ On and after August 6th, there will be in operation 766 money-order postoffices, of which number 31 are in Michigan. Orders are to be issued in sums not to exceed $50, at the following rates; Not exceeding $20, 10 cents; over $20 and not exceeding $50, 25 cents.

HOPES CRUSHED.—Messrs. Robinson & Brooks, Claim Agents, Detroit, assert that not one in five of the numerous applicants for bounty will be entitled under the new bounty law. This results, we suppose, from some peculiarity of the law.

Burglars About.

Henry Heesen, who is at work in Smith's Cabinet Shop in Brownville had a watch and ninety dollars stolen from him last Thursday. He went about his work as usual in the morning, but before doing so took off his pants and vest containing his watch and wallet and laid them in the coffin room—a room which is unoccupied by the workmen most of the time—and when he went to get them to go to dinner the watch and his cash were among the missing. They were evidently taken by some one, who is well acquainted with the premises but no clue has, as yet, been found to the thief.

☞ We learn with pleasure that Col. Saviers has accepted the position of assistant Teacher in the Union School.—He is well known among us and we know of no one whom we should prefer to see acting in that capacity than the Colonel

☞ The Phœnix Ins. Co. of Hartford. Lost $40,000 in the late Portland Fire and on the eigth day after the fire every loss had been adjusted AND PAID. This fire illustrates the importance of first class insurance. If a building is worth insuring at all it is worth insuring in a company that is perfectly sound and that pays promptly. If a man accidentally burns down he dislikes to wait six months for his money. The Phœnix has lost over $6000, in Tecumseh and has paid every loss with promptness. Policies executed to order with neatness and dispatch by
S. C. STACY, Agent.

☞ Don't forget—that Anderson & Larned are crowding of their stock of Dry Goods at cost, in order to make room for an entirely new stock by the 15th of the month. Great bargains offered. Don't forget to call.

Telling her many charms
In verse, so sweet and tender,
Bidding her lovers, all,
Much adoration lend her.

She's festooned summer bowers
And added to the beauty
Of many a maiden fair,
As if it were a duty.

She's decked the fairest brides,
That's stood before the altar;
When on their lips "love's vows"
Seemed timidly to falter.

Her roses, they have wreathed
The brows of those "departed," Seeming about to smile
Upon the broken-hearted.

She's satisfied the taste
Of invalids, capricious,
With fruits, and berries-sweet,
The ripest—most delicious.

Her moon shines brighter, far,
Her evening stars, the fairest,
Of all the long twelve months,
Dear "Junie," is the best.

Fain would we urge her stay,
For we do love her dearly;—
But come again she must,
We're sure to see her yearly. L.

PROFANITY.

As a public journalist, we consider it our duty to exercise a careful watch over the morals of our village; and as far as the influence of our paper is felt, discountenance everything which is calculated to encourage profanity.

There are some persons, who are shockingly profane at all times, without the existence of any exciting cause to offer as an excuse.—There are others again, who are not habitually profane, but who, under the influence of some sudden excitement, will make use of language hardly fit for ears polite. Of course, if we can do anything towards removing the exciting cause; we shall at the same time help to lessen the amount of profanity, and thus do our share towards drying up a great evil.

We will not stop to argue the question, as to whether profanity in an evil. We are willing to leave that work to our clergymen. For our own part, we do not need any argument to convince us of the evil and wickedness of this common but disgusting habit. We know that it is wrong, and we sincerely wish the habit could go entirely out of fashion. But we are fully persuaded in our own mind, that this evil will never be abolished in Tecumseh, until our side-walks are mended! The ministers may preach, and the editor may write, and all christian people do what they can by way of example, in order to discourage this prevalent habit, but it will do little if any good, while the side-walks are in such a dilapidated condition, as to endanger the personal safety of all who walk over them.

In passing through our streets in the evening, especially when there is no moon, one runs the risk of dislocating his ankles, breaking his legs, or splitting his toe nails, by stepping through the holes, or stubbing his toes against the ends of planks which are not nailed down. And to expect, that under such provocations people wholly abstain from profanity, is all idle. We are sorry for it. We devoutly wish they would not swear, even when excited thereto by torn gaiters and splintered toe nails. But we know they will, for unconverted human nature cannot stand every thing; and we have a suspicion that while ones big toe is aching in consequence of its violent collision with a "snake head," the sinfulness of profanity is for a time being pretty much lost sight of.

We would therefore recommend, that our city fathers direct Marshall Hyde to repair the side walks, by nailing down the loose planks, and supplying the places of the broken ones with those that are sound. We verily believe, that this would do more towards diminishing the amount of profanity in our village, than a sermon on that subject from each of our ministers.

Universalist Church.

A very interesting and impressive service took place at the Universalist Church, in this village, last Sunday afternoon. It seems, that until now, there has not been anything but a society organization, in connection with the congregation worshiping in that house, although the present pastor, Rev. H. L. Hayward, has earnestly desired the organization of a Church, and labored persistently to bring about such a result.

Several preliminary meetings had been held during the past few weeks, which resulted in the organization of a Church of thirty-two members. The public recognition of this new organization, as a responsible member of the great family of Churches, took place last Sunday afternoon. The occasion was one of exceeding great interest to the members of that congregation, as well as to many members of the other congregations in this village, who had gone in as spectators. The ordinance of baptism was administered to sixteen of the members, after which the eucharist was celebrated and the congregation dismissed. The services, were exceedingly solemn and impressive, and teers were freely shed by many who were present to witness them.

Miscellany.

A NEW TEMPERANCE SONG.

BY S. F. BENNETT.

Sit down by my side, as of old, Mary dear
I will leave you in sorrow no more,
And want that has preyed on your cheek, Mary dear
Shall never return to our door.
I know I've been wrong, very wrong, Mary dear,
In tarrying long at the wine,
But help me to mend, if you can, Mary dear,
For no loving can save me but thine.

You know I was kind in the past, Mary dear,
Ere drinking had made me insane,
And never in those happy days, Mary dear,
Your pleadings were uttered in vain;
God helping, the light of those days Mary dear,
Shall shine on your pathway again,
And happiness gladden your heart, Mary dear,
As fully and truly as then.

I know of the nights you have watched, Mary dear,
And cared for the children alone,
While I have been crazy with drink, Mary dear,
Forgetting the blessing of home.
I'll watch by your side, from this hour, Mary dear,
I'll share every sorrow and pain,
And make you believe that your love, Mary dear,
Has not all been wasted in vain.

Forgive me for wronging your love, Mary dear,
And bringing your children to shame,
I'll try and atone for the past, Mary dear,
And wash out its record of blame
Do you think they will love me again, Mary dear,
And watch for my coming at eve,
And be glad when I smile at their sports, Mary dear,
And be sad in their love when I grieve.

In the lone little yard by the church, Mary dear,
Sweet Willie is taking his rest;
We think of his dear absent face, Mary dear,
Forgetting our baby is blest;
Yet how can I smother the wish, Mary dear,
To try once again to do right,
When I think of our dear angel boy, Mary dear,
Who once was our hearts' fond delight?

The tear-drops are wetting your cheeks, Mary dear,
Let me kiss them away as of old,
When tears, if they fell from your eyes, Mary dear,
Were glad ones, and precious as gold.
The love-light that gleamed in your eyes, Mary dear,
In the hours of the glad long ago,
Beams tenderly now on my face, Mary dear,
And I am forgiven I know.

From a Letter from the Plains.

A Hot Place.

Our evenings are cool, and when the day's march has not been too fatiguing, the soldiers gather around a cedar wood camp fire, and, in their way, indulge in camp gossip. I listened to a discussion last evening on the comparative merits, or, rather, demerits, of the various military posts at which they had seen service.

"Which was the coldest post?"

A candidate from Rouse's Point presented its claims, who was distanced by another from Detroit, who was in fact ignominously routed by a cavalryman who had wintered at Pembina.

"Which is the hottest post?" was logically and meteorologically the next question.

Tampa Bay, Key West, and Point Isabel were all warmly advocated; but the discussion was thoroughly—indeed, one might say hermetically—closed by a three chevroned veteran, who, with a Homeric wave of the hand, imposed silence.

"All were attentive to the warlike man,
When rising from his couch he thus began."

"Boys! Did any of you ever hear of Fort Yuma?"

Not one of them!

"Well, Fort Yuma is clear over beyond Arizona, near the Gulf of California, where nothing grows, nor flies, nor runs. It's the hottest post, not only in the United States, but in creation, and I'll prove it to you. You see I was ordered there six years ago, and hadn't been there two weeks, in the month of August, when two Corporals died. They had been there ever since the post was a post—in old Hoffman's time. Well, they both died, and where do you think they went?"

No one could possibly imagine.

"Why, I'll tell you, they both went straight to h—l!"

Profound astonishment in the auditory.

"Yes, but they hadn't been gone forty-eight hours—hardly time to have their descriptive lists examined and put on fatigue duty down below—when, one night, the hospital steward was waked up in a hurry, and there he saw the two Corporals."

"'What do you want,' says he. You know them hospital stewards are always surprised at a soldier's ever wanting anything. 'What do you want,' says he.

"'We want our blankets,' says they.

"After that you needn't talk to me about any post being hot as Yuma!"

The auditory separated in silence!

The Fastest Time.

There is much inquiry among the lovers of the turf as to the best running time ever made, and nearly every number of Wilkes' Spirit of the Times, has more or less inquiries on the subject. The last number of Wilkes' Spirit, in reply to "What is the fastest time in mile heats recognized?" answers 1:41. That was Legal Tender's time, without full weights, and Revolver's with full weights. This, then, settles the matter as to the fastest mile in mile heats, but it is by no means the fastest mile ever run. In 1855, at the Metaire course, New Orleans, Perritt run a single mile in 1:42 1-6 and a heat of two miles in 3:30. Arrow and Brown Dick, at the same meeting, ran three miles in 5:28, being 1:49 to the mile.

In Lexington's great performance against Lecompte's time, the world was astonished by the unheard of time of 6:19¾, in a four mile heat. His first and fourth miles were run in 3:36.

We give from recollection the fastest time, at all distances, so far as we know:

1 mile pacing, Pocahontas	2:17¾
1 mile, trotting, Lexington	2:18¼
2 miles, trotting, Flora Temple	4:50½
3 miles, trotting, Dutchman	7:32½
10 miles, trotting, Prince	30:08½
20 miles, trotting, Trustee	59:36¾
100 miles, trotting, Conqueror	8:55:53
100 miles, double, Master Burke and Robin,	10:17:22
1 mile, running, Henry Perrett	1:42½
4 miles, running, Lexington	7:19½

Boston, the sire of Lexington, started in some 40 races, and won over 30 at four miles alone, winning for his owners about $60,000. He was the sire of 95 winners, who collectively won 276 races—61 at three miles, and 26 at four miles.

Flora Temple, now over 20 years old, has been the winner of over $100,000, and the glorious little queen is still as bright as a new button, and fit to trot for a man's life to-day.—Richmond Humming Bird.

Mesopotamia.

It may be an exaggeration to represent an old woman saying that she found great support in the comfortable word "Mesopotamia," but the spirit which animated her is really very widely diffused in other old women, and young women and men too. Indeed so much in quotation depends upon pleasant sound, that we firmly believe that these nonsense verses might be recited at the fireside without being at once detected just for the reason that we do not always pause to think whether we attach any importance to what we hear. At any rate here they are:

'Tis sweet to roam when morning's light
Resounds across the deep;
When the crystal song of the woodbine bright
Hushes the rocks to sleep;
When the midnight sky has a sombre dye
Of a pale and inky hue,
And the wolf rings out his glittering shout,
"Tu whit—Tu whit—Tu whoo!"

When the pearly wing of the wintry trees
Dashes across the glen;
When the laughing lights of the moss-grown cliffs
Haunt the ethereal fen;
When at noon the blood shot moon
Is bathed in crumbling dew,
And the wolf rings out his glittering shout,
"Tu whit—Tu whit—Tu whoo!"

Not a few person's will cry, "How pretty!" when the words are read fast. They have the true "Mesopotamia" ring about them. It cannot be denied that people who make a point of interlarding their conversation with quotations are an intolerable nuisance.

THE CABLE LAID!

NEW YORK, July 29th—3:30 A. M.—the following dispatch has just been received from Cyrus W. Field:

HEART'S CONTENT, July 27.—We arrived here at 9 o'clock this morning, all well, thank God. The cable has been laid, and is in perfect working order.

(Signed) CYRUS W. FIELD.

SECOND DISPATCH.

HEART'S CONTENT, July 27th, 1866.—We are in telegraphic communication with Ireland. The cable is in perfect order.

(Signed) CYRUS W. FIELD.

THIRD DISPATCH.

HEART'S CONTENT, July 27.—England and America are again united by telegraph. The cable is in perfect order. We have been receiving and sending messages through the whole ever since the splice on the 13th inst. off Valentia.

(Signed) CYRUS W. FIELD.

HEART'S CONTENT, July 29.—The Great Eastern left Sheerness on Saturday at noon, June 30th. Arrived at Berehaven July 5th, and received the balance of her coals and provisions. The other steamers joined the Great Eastern at Berehaven, as follows: The Wm. Corry and Terrible on Friday, July 6th, the Albany on the 7th, and the Medway on Tuesday the 10th instant. On Saturday, the 7th of July, the end of the Irish shore cable was landed from the Wm. Corry, and at 2:30 the next morning the laying was successfully completed and the end buried in ninety-four fathoms, latitude 51:40, longitude 11:08, distance from the telegraph house at Valentia 27½ miles, 20¼ miles of cable laid out.

Wednesday, 11th instant—Her Majesty's steamer Raccoon arrived at Berehaven to render all assistance in her power.

Thursday, 12th instant—The Great Eastern, Medway, Albany, Terrible and Raccoon near one another. Services held at Valentia and prayers offered up for the successful laying of the cable.

Friday, 13th instant—The shore end was connected to the main cable on board the Great Eastern and at 2:40 P. M. the telegraph fleet started for Newfoundland and the Raccoon returned to Valentia. The telegraph fleet sailed in the following order: The Terrible ahead of the Great Eastern, on the starboard bow, the Medway on the port, and the Albany on the starboard quarter, weather thick and foggy, with heavy rains. Signals sent through the cable on board the Great Eastern, and to the telegraph house at Valentia. Two thousand four hundred and forty nautical miles found perfect.

Saturday, July 14.—Distance run, 108 miles; cable paid out, 116 miles.

Sunday, July 15.—Distance run, 128 miles; cable paid out, 116 miles.

Tuesday, July 17.—Distance run, 118 miles; cable paid out, 138 miles.

Wednesday, July 18.—Distance run, 105 miles; cable paid out, 129 miles.

Thursday, 19th—Distance run, 122 miles; cable paid out, 129 miles.

27th—Distance run, 112 miles; cable paid out, 118 miles; which, with the shore end off Valentia, distance, 27 miles, cable paid out 29 miles, makes the distance run 1,669 and paid out 1,864 miles.

Arrived at Heart's Content at 8 A. M., Friday, July 57th.

The average speed of the ship from the time the splice was made until we saw land was a little less than five nautical miles per hour, and the cable had been paid out at an average of five and a half miles per hour The total slack was less than 12 per cent.

The weather has been more pleasant than I have ever known on the Atlantic at this season of the year. We have had alternate days of rain, sunshine, fogs and squalls. I have requested Mr. John C. Dean, Secretary of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, to send you by the first opportunity, for the Associated Press, twenty-five copies of his diary, which give you a detailed account of the ups and downs experienced in laying a cable across the Atlantic.

We have been in constant communication with Valentia since the splice was made on the 13th inst., and have daily received news from Europe, which was posted up outside of the telegraph office for the information of all on board the Great Eastern, and signalled to the other ships.

After taking in coal the telegraph fleet will sail for the spot where the cable was was lost last year, to recover the end and complete a second line between Ireland and Newfound, and then the Medway will proceed to lay the new cable across the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

The cable will be open for business in a few days, and all messages will be sent to Europe in the order they are received at Heart's Content.

I cannot find words suitable to convey my admiration for the men who have so ably conducted the nautical engineering and electrical departments of this enterprise so successfully, amidst difficulties which required to be seen to be appreciated. In fact all on board of the telegraph fleet, and all connected with the enterprise, have done their very best to have the cable made and laid in perfect condition, and He who rules the winds and waves has crowned their efforts with perfect success.

CYRUS W. FIELD.

HEART'S CONTENT, July 27, via Aspy Bay, July 29.—The London Times of the 27th says of the telegraph: "It is a great work—the glory of the age and nations—and they who have achieved it deserve to be honored as benefactors of their race."

A treaty of peace has been signed between Austria and Prussia. A previous telegram says that a five days' armistice between Austria and Prussia commenced at noon on the 23d. There was fighting on the 22d, the Austrians claiming a victory.

Earl Shaftsbury had protested in the House of Commons against reform meetings.

In a discussion on the tariff, Sir John Packington admitted that England was behind other nations.

A severe engagement took place on the 20th off the Island of Lissa. The Austrians claimed a victory. They sank the Italian iron-clad, running down one and blowing up three.

HEART'S CONTENT, July 27.

His Excellency, President Johnson:

SIR:—The Atlantic Cable was successfully completed this morning. I hope it will prove a blessing to England and the United States, and increase the intercourse between our own country and the Eastern Hemisphere. Yours, faithfully,

(Signed) CYRUS W. FIELD.

WASHINGTON, July 29.

To Cyrus W. Field, Heart's Content:

I heartily congratulate you, and trust that your enterprise may prove as successful as your efforts have been persevering. May the cable under the sea tend to promote harmony between the Republic of the West and the Governments of the Eastern Hemisphere.

(Signed) ANDREW JOHNSON.

HEART'S CONTENT, July 27.

The Hon. William H. Seward, Washington:

The telegraph cable has been successfully laid between Ireland and Newfoundland. I remember with gratitude your services in the Senate of the United States in the winter of 1857, and recollect with pleasure the speech you then made in favor of the telegraph bill. That you may never have reason to regret what you have done to establish communication across the Atlantic is the sincere wish of your friend,

(Signed) CYRUS W. FIELD.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 29.

Cyrus W. Field, Heart's Content:

If the acknowledgements and congratulations of the Atlantic Cable had not failed in 1858, European States would not have been led in 1861 into the great error of supposing that civil war in America could either perpetuate African slavery or divide this great Republic. Your great achievement constitutes, I trust, an effective treaty of international neutrality and non-intervention.

(Signed) WM. H SEWARD.

HEART'S CONTENT, July 27.

The Honorary Directors Atlantic Telegraph Company:

I congratulate you on the successful completion of telegraph communication between Ireland and Newfoundland, and hope within two weeks from this time that the cable lost last year has been recovered, and that a second line is in operation across the Atlantic. I assure you that all on board the telegraph fleet will do all that they can to accomplish this object.

(Signed) CYRUS W. FIELD.

HEART'S CONTENT, July 27.

The Directors of the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company:

We arrived this day. The cable has been laid across the Atlantic, and is in perfect working order. As soon as we have taken in coal we shall proceed to the spot where the cable was lost last year, and when recovered, splice it with the cable on board the Great Eastern, and return to this place. Then the Medway will proceed to lay the cable across the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

I cannot express to you how thankful I feel that you will now receive some return for the money that you have spent and the time you have devoted the last half year to connect by telegraph our own country with Great Britain.

(Signed) CYRUS W. FIELD.

HEART'S CONTENT, July 27, 9:10 A. M.—C. W. Field says there have been riots in London on account of the refusal of the Government to allow a Reform meeting in Hyde Park. A daily paper has been published on the Great Eastern.

Production of Beet-Sugar.

We spoke last week of the future prospects of sugar production in general; we now have to speak of the prospects of the manufacture from beet-root in France. The Moniteur gives the result of the season of 1865 and '66, during which there were 419 factories in operation, producing in all, 282,000 tuns of sugar. The produce of the preceding season was only 168,000 tuns, so that the increase amounted to more than two-thirds of the former yield. M. Pezeyre, a well known writer on such subjects, says "that the native manufacture of sugar was never before so large or flourishing." The abundance of the roots and the richness of their saccharine matter was the principal causes of the extraordinary increase in production recorded above; but it most not be forgotten that to the improved modes of manufacture must be attributed the greatly increased quantity of crystallized sugar—(we referred to the efforts of one manufacturer, M. Roberts de Massy, in this direction in The Grocer of the second instant.) Many sugar houses now produce two cwt. of sugar from a tun and a quarter of beet, which is a considerable increase upon the yield. There are sugar works which divide from twenty to thirty per cent among their shareholders, consequently the sugar fever has seized upon the agriculturists of those departments where the beet-root grows with success, and in some places the growers are subscribing their means in order to make their sugar. Some few believe that in a short time there will be no such thing as molasses produced in France from beet-root, and that every ounce of extract will be made crystallizable, and that the increase in the growth of the beet-root and the manufacture will proceed so rapidly that the price of the sweet product will be very greatly reduced. If these views are correct, and allowing perhaps for a little enthusiasm, there is no reason to totally discredit them; and provided also that a forced increase in cultivation does not give rise to some kind of disease in the roots—as happens constantly in such cases—this prospect as regards beet-root sugar may create a great change in the markets, for the improvement and increased development of beet-root sugar-making in France will have its effect in all other countries where the industry exists. The cheapening of beet sugar will certainly not aid the recovery of the sugar trade in the West Indies or elsewhere, but until the sugar cane can be made to yield the amount of juice that it ought to yield, it is a matter of congratulation that the beet-root prospects are so favorable. Caricatures were very facetious half a century ago, over the notion of making sugar out of turnips as they chose to call the roots, and one of them represented a nurse presenting an enormous beet-root to the little King of Rome, and saying "Suck, baby, suck! Papa says it's sugar." The commencement of the beet-root sugar manufacture, like that of many other good things, arose out of dire necessity, but men of science and others have turned the laugh against the caricaturists, for it is certain that nearly 300,000 tuns of sugar have been extracted from beet-roots in a single season. The progress of the trade reflects the highest honor upon our neighbors, and we heartily rejoice in their having found such excellent employment for the land and its cultivation.—The Grocer.

THE Clyde (Ohio) Times says that General McPherson's grave at that place is only known by a small mound of earth with a rough head-board.

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK.

General Intelligence.

A Washington dispatch announces the death of John Ross, the distinguished Cherokee chief, in that city.

A heavy pressure is being brought upon the President by the bankers and brokers, to remove Secretary McCulloch.

The public debt statement will show a further reduction during the last two months of about twenty-seven millions of dollars.

Over 200,000 coffins are now in Washington, awaiting shipment to the different cemeteries designed for the burial of Union soldiers.

The President has signed all the bills presented to him, with the exception of that for the admission of Nebraska, which has therefore failed to became a law.

A Queenstown, Ireland, correspondent says: The Fenian movement has produced the most injurious effects on the material and industrial interests of Ireland.

Attorney General Stansbery has given an opinion that the nominations rejected by the Senate can be legally made by the President during the recess.

The President's message to Queen Victoria, containing 77 words, passed through the cable in 11 minutes, and was delivered to the Queen almost immediately.

The "conscience fund" of the Treasury Department is being largely increased by contributions from small Government plunders. It is stated that there are in this fund over $60,000.

The printing bureau of the Treasury department is now printing ten millions of stamps of different denominations for beer barrels, as required by a recently passed law.

News from Mexico represents the situation of the Empire as daily growing more critical. The fall of Matamoras had caused great dismay. The Imperial newspapers are excited and petulant in their discussion of the situation.

The Senate has been very liberal, in connection with the Executive Department, in bestowing brevets for gallant and meritorious conduct in the field. Brevets have been conferred as far back as the first battle of Bull Run. In some cases no less than three brevets have been given to one person.

The increased pay of members of Congress amounts to twenty-eight hundred dollars each. Although many members of Congress voted against the increase of their salaries, it is pretty clearly established that every one of them had drawn the extra pay.

It is again announced that President Johnson and Secretary Seward will leave Washington on the 27th instant for Chicago, to attend the laying of the corner stone of the Douglas Monument, which will take place about the first of September. Perhaps one or two other members of the Cabinet will accompany them.

It is estimated that the expenses incurred by the Government by the passage of the bill for the equalization of bounties, will be about seventy-five millions of dollars. The Paymaster General says it will take three years to examine the accounts of soldiers to whom this extra bounty is due, and the amount, therefore, to be paid yearly, will amount to twenty-five millions.

A new revolutionary secret society has been organized and put in extensive operation in New York, having for its object the complete separation of the Canadian Provinces from the mother country. Its numbers are not stated, but are said to be on a rapid increase—branches of the Canadian Independence Association being established in all the principal cities of the United States. A similar organization of Cubans, to free Cuba from Spanish power, and supported by influential Southern gentlemen, has also been started. Members complain that Cuba is preyed upon by Spanish officials. Both are modeled upon like associations which lately sprung up in England.

It is hinted in Fenian circles that another and more formidable invasion than the last is in preparation against the Canadian provinces. Arms and ammunition are being accumulated in large quantities in New York, and in several of the frontier towns. It is rumored that Gen. Dick Taylor will command the Fenian forces this time, and that the men will be well equipped and armed with breech-loading rifles of the Spencer pattern. The movement, it is said, will take place in September or in the early part of October. The Fenian leaders are busily engaged in perfecting arrangements for a raid of great magnitude, and each member of the organization is to be assessed twenty-five dollars to carry out the programme.

We devote considerable space this week to the details of the successful laying of the cable and the earliest messages over it. It may safely be pronounced the greatest triumph of human ingenuity the world has ever seen. All honor to the immortal projector of the Great Eastern! He is dead, but his works live after him. He never dreamed that his great ship, after having failed as an investment, and bankrupted its owners, would be turned to such wonderful account. He never dreamed that he was furnishing the world with a ship that would one day take 24,000 tons of telegraph cable in its bosom and lay it on the bottom of the Atlantic—the only ship that ever was, or perhaps ever will be, that could perform so magnificent a service to mankind.

The South.

The Navy Department denies the statement relative to the kidnapping of negroes the coast of Florida.

An attested copy of the resolution adopted by the Tennessee Legislature, ratifying the Constitutional amendment has been forwarded to Washington.

A. T. Stewart's agent has selected a site for a great branch dry goods house at Savannah. The front of the building measures 42 feet, and extends back 810 feet, height 90 feet, having six stories. The architect has drawn up a complete plan of the building, which will be forwarded to New York for approval.

The grand jury in New Orleans have found a true bill against twenty-five members of the convention, but writs will not be executed until the city returns into civil hands. Twenty-two policemen in all were wounded in the riot, two of whom have died. The total number of deaths is stated at 40, and wounded at 166.

Galveston and Houston cities, Texas, have increased in population very rapidly since the war. The former city had, before the war, a population of about 5,000; now according to a recent enumeration, the population of Galveston is near 26,000. Houston, a small city of between five and six thousand inhabitants, now numbers upwards of 16,000. The trade of the south-western cities is said to be equal to that of New Orleans, population considered.

Gen. Sheridan, in a dispatch from New Orleans to Gen. Grant, received on the 3d, states that the late riot in that city was not the effect of a hastily congregated mob, as has been represented, but was the result of a preconcerted and prearranged plot of the rebels to slaughter the leading Union men of the State; and that there is evidence that the plan was concocted weeks ago. Sheridan also gives it as his opinion that it is but the commencement of the rebel plan to rid Louisiana of Union men. Officers from the southwest say they are only about 1,200 United States troops serving in Louisiana.

On the 30th ult. a riot took place in New Orleans on the occasion of the meeting of the Constitutional Convention of 1864. It being understood that this body were in favor of extending the elective franchise to negroes and trouble being anticipated, President Johnson had ordered the artillery, under General Baird, to sustain the Convention, and prevent its being broken up. Reports vary as to the first demonstrations of violence, some asserting that a procession of colored men were attacked by whites,—others that the negroes collected in front of the Hall and defied interference. It is certain, however, that the police under the direction of the Mayor forced their way into the Convention, when the fighting commenced inside and outside the building. About thirty negroes were killed, a hundred and fifty more wounded, and four hundred more were marched off to jail under arrest. Several white men—some eight or ten—were killed, among them Dr. Dostie, a prominent Union man and member of the Convention, and General Michael Hahn, the Military ex-Governor. After the fight the troops arrived, and at the latest accounts quiet had been restored. Martial law had been proclaimed, and United States regulars were patrolling the streets. The members of the Convention, arrested by order of the Mayor, had been released by General Baird. General Sheridan, the Division Commander, was absent on a tour of inspection, but his arrival was looked for at any moment. The number of killed and wounded during the massacre is stated by some, as high as three hundred. Business was of course suspended throughout the city.

A melancholy accident occurred at a picnic in the neighborhood of Monticello, Ill., last Saturday. A young man named John L. Wilson was freezing ice-cream, and, while so engaged, a four barreled pistol in his vest pocket fell out, and, striking the ground, one of the lads was discharged, the ball entering his nostril and lodging in his brain. Death ensued instantly.

At about four o'clock on the afternoon of the 2d, some desperate thief walked into the counting-room of John Lamb, on Kilgour street, Cincinnati, just as the proprietor's son was counting some money, and, with a piece of brick in a handkerchief, knocked both of them to the floor, snatched up $95, and made his escape.

The Galena Gazette says the strike of the steamboat crews in the employ of the Northwestern Union Packet Company has ended. The men struck for $100 per month. The crews, on learning this, offered to work for fifty dollars per month, but the company had no use for their services.

A CALIFORNIA paper tells the following of Lieutenant Derby—"John Phœnix," the humorist:

One evening at the theatre, Phœnix observed a man sitting three seats in front, whom he thought he knew; he requested the person sitting next to him to punch the other individual with his cane. The polite stranger did so, and the disturbed person turning his head, he discovered his mistake—that he was not the person he took him for. Fixing his attention steadfastly on the play, and affecting his unconsciousness of the whole affair, he left the man with the cane to settle with the other for the disturbance, who, being wholly without an excuse, there was of course a ludicrous and embarrassing scene, during all of which, Phœnix was profoundly interested in the play.

At list the man with the cane asked rather indignantly, "Didn't you tell me to punch that man with my stick!"

"Yes."

"And what did you want."

"I wanted to see whether you would punch him or not."

Occupation.

Occupation! what a glorious thing it is for a human heart. Those who work hard seldom yield themselves entirely up to real or fancied sorrow. When grief sits down, folds its hands, and mournfully feeds upon its own tears, weaving the dim shadows that a little exertion might sweep away into a funeral pall, the strong spirit is shorn of its might, and sorrow becomes our master. When troubles flow upon you, dark and heavy, toil not with the waves—wrestle not with the torrent—rather seek by occupation to divert the dark waters that threaten to overwhelm you into a thousand channels which the duties of life always present. Before you dream of it, those waters will fertilize the present, and give birth to fresh flowers that may brighten the future—flowers that will become pure and holy, in the sunshine which penetrates to the path of duty. Grief after all, is but a selfish feeling; and most selfish is he who yields himself to the indulgence of any passion that brings no joy to his fellow men.

It is seventy years old, and is the identical one first used by Abraham Lincoln. This razor, before the death of Thomas Lincoln, Abraham's father, was presented to Mr. Hanks. It has been handled by over 10,000 people during the past year."

—The Express says, with regard to the recent seizure of distilleries in New York, that instead of three there should have been two hundred seized. It is intimated that some of the revenue officers are in collusion with illicit distillers. A few months since, one hundred barrels of whisky were seized and sold at auction, but the purchaser found that forty of the barrels had been emptied of liquor, and filled with water after the seizure.

—In Leicester, Mass., on Tuesday, a daughter of Henry G. Spear, ten years old, fell from a load of hay upon a pitchfork, a tine of which entered her mouth just back of the eye tooth, and passed up through her eye into the brain. The tine was broken off, and the little girl pulled it out and walked several rods to the house, when she fainted, and remained unconscious for twelve hours. Since then she gradually regained her senses, and hopes are entertained of her recovery.

—To ex-Gov. Pollock, Director of the United States Mint at Philadelphia, twice a year comes a shambling ill-clad man, who claims to be entitled to the interest on some millions of dollars. Every usher at the Mint knows him, and treats him with sympathy and tenderness. Gov. Pollock converses with him kindly, and, with the assurance that the Government must "very soon" be ready to settle with him, the unfortuate monomaniac takes his leave. He does not reappear for six months.

—The hopes entertained for the safety of the Monarch of the Seas, which left the Mersey for New York on the 19th of last March, with 639 cabin and steerage passengers on board, have been at length dispelled by the discovery of a boat, pitched up on the coast of Kerry, on the 7th inst., and which is believed to have belonged to the vessel, together with a number of dead bodies. The Monarch of the Seas was an American built ship, and ten years old. The prevailing opinion among experienced captains in the New York trade is, that she foundered among the icebergs.

—When Mr. Fagan's little girl died, last week (poisoned by morphine, given by mistake for quinine), her little brother Johnny had a similar prescription put up for him. He remarked to Mr. Winstanly, "Uncle, I don't want to take that medicine; it killed sissy, and will kill me." "Oh, no," said Mr. W., "it was not the medicine that killed your little sister." The little fellow then replied, "May be not; but I wish you would let me see my pony before I take it, because I don't believe I will ever see him again." He was shown the pony, took the medicine, and in one hour afterwards was a corpse.—Belleville (Ill.) Advocate.

—The New York Express says: "We have seen some specimens of straw printing paper equal in durability and smoothness to any made of cotton or linen rags. The process of manufacture is quite new and very simple, and though, just now, we are not at liberty to state it, we know enough to believe that straw can make the very best paper, either for books or newspapers, and that the discovery must work a complete revolution in printing paper, and, we trust in the price, as well as in the quality. The cost and the nuisance of getting rags from abroad may, at least, be avoided, as straw will make the very best of paper."

—Helena City, Montana Territory, is governed in a way which cannot be universally recommended. A correspondent writes as follows: "There is not a city in the country more quiet or better governed. Do you ask the cause? There is but one explanation possible. We have an active vigilance committee, plenty of rope, and a pine tree handy, where justice is laid to the line. There have been seven men hung to a tree, for various crimes, only one for murder in this city, the others for robberies and crimes committed elsewhere. These executions are conducted in the night, after a full and fair trial, though not public, and so far no one has been executed but those who richly deserved it."

—The new office of the New York Herald, on the site of Barnum's old Musuem, is nearly completed. The lower story is of iron, and the remainder is of white marble. Elegant cornices span every window, in the centre of which the initials "J. G. B." are quite prominent. Mr. Bennett says that he is getting to be an old man, and he wants to leave the new Herald office as his tombstone. The building is to be ready on the 1st of September. It is to be completely furnished throughout, everything being new from the ten cylinder presses down to the "ad." rules and towels. Rooms are to be reserved for editorial and reportorial sleeping apartments, and a corps of the latter will be continually kept on duty. On its removal, the Herald will be enlarged to the size of the Tribune, and its price reduced to three cents per copy.

—The Amador, Cal., Ledger says: A few days ago an Irishman left Copperopolis for San Andreas, or some other "very fine place," with his carpet sack upon his back, and when about five miles on his way, was met by a "road-agent" who demanded his money. Pat immediately dropped his pack on the ground and sat down on it, and thus addressed the man: "Holy Virgin, yez must be pretty along this road; I've only come five miles this morning and this is the fourth time I've been stopped and axed for me money." "Is that so?" asked the highwayman. "By me soul it's the Gospel truth," replied Pat. "Well, then, you had better proceed on your way; it wouldn't pay to go through you now." Pat shouldered his carpet bag, and they were about to separate when he turned round and said—"Have ye iver sich a thing about you as a match to light me pipe wid?" He was supplied with one, and the two separated.

The Irishman had five hundred dollars in gold coin in his bundle, and by this piece of shrewdness saved his money.

Foreign Gossip.

—Accounts from Brisbane, by way of Sidney, published in the Melbourne Argus, mentions a report that a Fenian movement is afoot there, and that men are being drilled, and meetings held at South Brisbane.

—Madame Bravura (French, married to Russian) spends 6,000 rubles every year in Parisian bonnets. She has a new one sent from Paris every day, and has never been seen twice in the same head-gear.—St. Petersburg Letter.

—The Parisian ladies have made a new and startling invention in dress. They have made bonnets smaller and smaller and beautifully less, until at last they consist of nothing more than a ribbon round the head with a veil attached to it. The veil is generally black.

—A Paris banker was recently presented to Prince Demidoff, who, to prevent conversation from dropping, said: "You have a beautiful breastpin." The banker delighted, for he was proud of his breastpin, said: "Yes, it is a very rare stone." Prince Demidoff replied: "Very rare and very expensive. You can't imagine the trouble I had to get my chimney-pieces at St. Petersburg for they are made of it."

—The Earl of Derby, the new English Premier, is said to be much more genial and full of life and fun, at his advanced age, than his son, Lord Stanley. At a dinner at Knowsley Park, Lord Stanley left the table soon after the ladies had withdrawn, leaving the gentlemen to their usual devotions,—whereupon the Earl said, "Now that the old man is gone, let's have some more wine."

—In the first accounts of the battle of Custozza, it was stated that Prince Humbert had performed "prodigies of valor." Full descriptions of the engagement reveal the fact what they were. Finding himself surrounded by Tyroleans, he drew his sword and ordered his men to form a square, with himself in the center. Col. Booker did the same thing at Limestone Ridge, with a similar result.

—M. Alexander Dumas says in a recent letter: "A short time since an old friend of mine was arrested for $2,400, and thrown into the debtors' jail. He sent me word he was under lock and key, and asked me to liberate him. I had not $2,400. I went to his creditor and entered into a contract, binding me to deliver six lectures in any six provincial towns he pleased, provided he released my friend. He accepted my offer, and my friend came out of jail at once."

—The lively Paris correspondent of the American Literary Gazette and Publishers' Circular gives some amusing examples of the inevitable propensity of the French to make blunders whenever they attempt to write on English or American subjects. A French newspaper, speaking of the horrors of London, said quite recently: "Will it be believed, in London a soup made of rotten green walnuts and cats' livers is eaten and popular in all classes of society?" Some of the subscribers of the paper insisted upon further particulars, in order that they might avoid the horrible soup when they went to London. The editor said the soup he alluded to was called in London walnut catsup.

—Among the many singular revelations made during the recent trial of the royal scandal case in London, is one which, if true, clears up the long disputed point as to the authorship of the letters of Junius. They were written by Dr. Wilmot, his granddaughter asserts, to obtain redress from George III, who, writhing under their sharp lash, was induced to sign certain certificates testifying to the marriage of Olive Wilmot and the birth of her child. The youthful Olive made the discovery accidentally, when she was but 14 years old. She chanced to take from her grandfather's library some loose manuscripts to scribble and draw upon, and they were found to be some of the letters of Junius.

—City of Mexico correspondence says the Fourth of July was duly celebrated there by the citizens of the United States residing there. Gen. J. B. Magruder, of the rebel army, and Prince Salm Salm, formerly of the United States army, paid their respects to the American Consul during the day, besides quite a crowd of less distinguished individuals. The Declaration of Independence was read by the Consul. The memory of Washington was eulogized by ex-Governor Reynolds, of Missouri, and Magruder responded to the toast of the army and navy of the United States. The memory of our martyred President was received with distinguished honor by all, the ex-rebels joining with marked respect in its observance.

—Some idea of an English duke's estate may be had when we state that the establishment of Devonshire would occupy one of our large counties. The park immediately surrounding the palace contains 3,000 acres. The principal garden for vegetables, fruits, green-houses, etc., is 25 acres. There are 30 green-houses, each from 50 to 75 feet long. Three or four of these contain nothing but melons and cucumbers. One peach tree on the glass wall measures 51 feet in width, 15 feet in height, and bears, 1,060 peaches. It is the largest in the world. The grape houses, 5 or 6 in all, 700 feet long. But what shall be said of the conservatory, filled with every variety of tropical plants? It covers an acre of ground, is 100 feet high and cost $500,000. It is heated by steam and hot water pipes, which in all are 6 miles in length.

—A young lady while bathing at East New London, the other day, had one of her toes so badly bitten by a crab that it will have to be amputated.

FAIRBANKS'

STANDARD

OF ALL KINDS.

Fairbanks, Greenleaf & Co.,

236 & 238 LAKE STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

DR. SWAIN'S VEGETABLE HAIR BALM invariably restores grey hair to its original color, without staining the skin or clothing. It leaves the most dry, dead and crisp hair, soft, moist and glossy, causes it to curl, and keeps it in its place, while it promotes its growth and prevents its falling off.

It contains neither oil or alcohol.

Numerous preparations of oil, alcohol and sulphur have been palmed upon the public, and having totally failed to give satisfaction, the manufacturers have deservedly come to grief.

Dr. Swain warrants his Vegetable Balm to accomplish all that he claims for it, and authorizes his agents to refund the money wherever it fails to give satisfaction.

It is an entirely new and scientific preparation, produced by the distilation of rare and fragrant flowers, which renders it not only the best renewer in the world, but makes it particularly agreeable as a hair dressing to both old and young, while its liquid purity and floral odor are in striking contrast with the nasty mixtures usually sold.

The proprietor has letters from many of the most distinguished as well as fashionable people, judges, clergymen, lawyers, physicians, opera singers, actresses, &c, certifying to the remarkable virtues of the Balm.

Don't let any dealer urge upon you a different article, but if your tradesman does not keep this, send one dollar for a trial bottle to the nearest agent, or the proprietor.

If for grey hair, send for No. 1.

To the Martyrs of Liver Complaint.

Among the wonderful medical properties which have rendered HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS pre-eminent among the health restoring preparations of the age, its anti-bilious virtues are not the least remarkable. No words can do justice to its marvelous effect upon the diseased liver. Perhaps the simple words of a convalescent sufferer, who describes it as "going right to the spot," tell the story as clearly as may be. It does go right to the spot. It operates directly upon the disordered organ, and whether unduly active or in a state of paralysis, restores it to a condition of health. The Sickness at the Stomach, pain between the shoulders and in the Right Side, Yellow Suffusion of the Skin, Costiveness, Drowsiness and Languor, Dimness of Sight, Colic, Palpitation of the Heart, Dry Cough, Low Fever, and other symptoms which indicate the various phases of Acute and Chronic Liver Complaint, are one and all promptly relieved, and finally removed, by the action of this famous preparation, which is at once the best of correctives, the gentlest and most genial of aperients, an infallible regulator, and a powerful restorative. Persons of a bilious habit, who use the Bitters as a protective medicine, will never suffer the pains and penalties of Liver disease or Bilious Remittent Fever.

DR. BELL'S GOLDEN TONIC STOMACH BITTERS.—Nine-tenths of the bitters in market are simply a mixture of cheap drugs and bad gin or whiskey. Dr. Bell's preparation is an exception, and as a tonic for the relief of fever and ague, dyspepsia, and nervous debility it is without a rival. It will shortly be introduced to this market by the manufacturers, Messrs. Coleman & Silver, of Chicago.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS AS A GENERAL ASSISTANT OF NATURE.

What is health? What is disease?

Health is when the supply and expenditure are equal. Disease when the supply and expenditure are unequal.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS impart certain expulsive powers to all matters in the body whose life is below the standard of the surrounding parts, or which have remained longer than the time nature designed. So in fevers and all that class of cases which soon run into mortification, BRANDRETH'S PILLS have marvelous curative qualities. Our bodies are continually changing, and it is by this change we live. Should matter remain in organs beyond the time nature designed, pain and inflammation set in, which is nothing more than a reparatory effort for our good. All Brandreth's Pills are supposed from their results to do, is simply ASSISTING THESE EFFORTS OF NATURE.

KELLEY & Co's GIFT CONCERT.—The first to embark in the Gift Enterprise business in Chicago, was the firm of A. A. Kelley & Co, located at 105 Randolph street. Who does not remember their store, which opened two or three years ago, where many purchased books and other articles, and were so lucky as to find with their purchases tickets which entitled them to valuable gifts of jewelry or other prizes? Thousands of our citizens were thus fortunate, and these have the best evidences that Messrs Kelley & Co. always perform all they promise; that they are honorable men and do business honorably and on the square.

Their Gift Concert which they now advertise, the drawing of which is to take place on the 22d of August, promises to be one of the most successful of the series of Gift Concerts that have taken place in Chicago.

1. The gifts to be distributed are all they are represented to be.
2. All the prizes will positively be distributed to those holding the lucky tickets after the drawing.
3. There is such a very large number of prizes that every one's chances are decidedly in favor of drawing something.
4. The citizens of Chicago who know A. A. Kelley & Co. have confidence in their honor and integrity, and are largely investing in their Enterprise.

These are some of the reasons why we feel safe in commending Kelley & Co.'s Gift Concert to the public. Let the people come up and buy the tickets still remaining unsold. The drawing will positively take place on the day advertised. Money may be sent by mail for tickets and will be promptly responded to.—From the Chicago Journal.

Ladies, take Particular Notice.

THE REAL VELPAU FEMALE PILL.

[WARRANTED FRENCH.]

THESE PILLS, so celebrated many years ago in Paris for the relief of female irregularities, and afterward so notorious for their criminal employment in the practice of abortion, are now offered for sale for the first time in America. They have been kept in comparative obscurity from the fact that the originator, Dr. Velpau, is a physician of this of great wealth and strict conscience upon its ciples, and has withheld them from general use, lest they should be employed for unlawful purposes. In overcoming Female Obstructions, Falling of the Womb, Whites, Green Sickness, Suppression, Retention, or Immoderate Flow of the Monthly Discharges, they seem to be truly omnipotent, bursting open the flood-gates from whatever cause may have stopped them; but they are offered to the public only for legitimate uses, and all agents are forbidden to sell them when it is understood that the object is unlawful. Married ladies should never take them when there is any reason to believe themselves pregnant, for they will be sure to produce a miscarriage.

These pills are entirely safe under all circumstances, being composed entirely of substances from the vegetable kingdom.

Each box has the coat of arms for the City of Paris stamped on the box, with the words "Trade Mark" in French, to counterfeit which is a misdemeanor, and all persons will be dealt with according to law.

☞ Full directions accompany every box.

Ladies can obtain a box sealed from the eyes of the curious, by inclosing One Dollar and six post-office stamps to any respectable druggists, or to O. G. STAPLES, General Agent for the United States, Watertown, N. Y.

An Acknowledgement.

We received a sack of superior flour from W. Comfort a week or two since for which we desire to return him our thanks. The Raisin Mills have been recently thoroughly refitted and repaired, and the proprietor probably has facilities for doing custom work, equal to any mill in Northern Lenawee. He is accomodating to his customers, pays the highest market price for Wheat and makes a no 1 flour every time. All who desire to buy his flour can find it in the sack at A. James'.

☞ The Bulk Head in the Red Mill Dam gave way last Tuesday morning, and consequently the Mill will be stopped for a few days. Luckily no other damage was done. A new Bulk Head will be put in immediately, and the Mill will be running again in a few days.—The new proprietors, John Miller & Son's have been overhauling and reparing the establishment from top to bottom and are prepared to do all kinds of business in their line in the best possible manner;—that is so, and we know it! for we have also been the recipient of a sack of choice flour from this Mill. Their advertisement will appear in our next issue.

☞ Teams have again begun drawing brick to the new Presbyterian Church, and the work will be resumed upon the walls forthwith. Owing to a deficiency in the supply of brick, the Masons have not been at work for nearly a fortnight.

So Mote it be.

In your issue of last week, you spoke of the execrable condition of our side-walks, as one of the prominent exciting causes of the profanity which disgraces our village. You wrote, as if you had yourself been through the subject, to the great detriment of your shins and toe-nails, if not your morals. The advice you gave the city fathers, to set Marshal Hyde at work mending the side-walks, is worthy of their serious consideration. That it has produced some effect in the right direction, is evident, from the fact that sundry piles of new plank have been dropped along some of our streets, as if new walks were to be laid. I have noticed also, that since the appearance of your lecture on profanity Marshal Hyde walks the streets with an unusually serious and earnest expression on his countenance, which says almost as plainly as words could express it; "the sidewalks shall be repaired, so that siners shall no longer swear at my expense."

Well, so far so good. I am thankful for any improvement in any directiou. But while our worthy Marshal is at work mending the paths of our feet so we can walk safely, let me whisper in your ear that there is another cause of much profane talk, which also demands the attention of our city fathers. Your reference to the side-walks, went directly to the root of the evil; while that to which I wish now to direct your attention, is higher up among the branches. I know to my sorrow, that sprained ankles are painful and splintered toe-nails excruciating. But would it produce any pleasurable emotions think you, when picking your way home some dark night, and carefully endeavoring to shun the "snake heads" and "man traps" in the side-walk; to fetch up suddenly, with your head fast locked in a tree top, to the great detriment of your best "plug," and the imminent danger of your eyes, to say nothing of sundry and ugly looking scratches on your face? Of course you would not be profane, even under circumstances of such extreme trial; but I would not dare to say as much of some of your neighbors.

But, "how about the tree tops, and why run your head into them," do you ask? Simply because the tree tops are where they have no right to be, hanging down so low over the side-walks, that a six-footer cannot pass under them without stooping. I wish you would take a walk up Chicago St. some day during a severe shower, and count the number of times your umbrella comes to a dead lock in a tree top while you walk from under just in time to catch all the water which the concussion has brought down. I think you would consider it a decidedly cool operation. It probably would not draw any profane expression from your lips, because you are not a swearing man. But it makes me shudder, to think of some specimens of profanity that I have heard called forth, by such sudden and unexpected contact with the tops of trees which need trimming.

I would suggest then Mr. Editor, that while our faithful Marshal is engaged in repairing the side-walks; he be instructed to look above occasionally, and cut away every branch of ornamental or fruit tree, which hangs low enough to interfere with the tall flag of our most fasionable dandy. Please add your word good Mr. Editor, to what I have written, in favor of this much needed improvement. Our village is justly celebrated for its beauty of location, and the general cleanliness of its streets. Let it be equally noted, for the morality of its citizens.—With its numerous Churches, its street sprinkler, its travelling boot-black, its side-walks put in good repair, and the troublesome limbs cut away from overhead; I am confident our town would compare favorably with any of its neighbors, as regards the morality of its inhabitants. "So mote it be." ONE OF THE SUFFERERS.

Poetry.

I've learned a few things, since I've become old,
That men are no better than brutes,
That men will get drunk, and women will scold,
And they're wicked clear down in their boots.

That some men and women will opium use,
And liquor tobacco and snuff,
Which all the dumb brutes will reject and refuse,
Because it's such mean filthy stuff.

With a pipe in their mouth as big as your wrist,
They are puffing all over the nation,
And a cud in their mouth as big as your fist,
They are squirting all over creation.

Then in battle array with musket and saber,
The country with horror they'll fill,
And at it they go and each other belabor,
And hundreds of thousands they'll kill.

Men all over the world have some strange superstition,
And are cruel in using their power,
They will chain their own species and enslave their condition,
And some will each other devour!

Who'd not be a Peacock, or Squirel for choice,
A Robbin or Parrot? do tell,
A Lion or Monkey that ever rejoice,
And are never in fear of a hell. D. BERDAN.

Important advice to Soldiers.

The new Bounty Law has passed and the Pension Law has been revised. All soldiers who served a term of three years, or who, having enlisted for three years, were discharged by reason of wounds received in the line of duty, and who have already received but one hundred dollars bounty are entitled to $100 additional bounty; also the widows, minor children and parents of such soldiers are entitled to a bounty of $100. By the revised Pension Law, widows, mothers and crippled soldiers are entitles to an increase of pension, and many, who have heretofore been unable to procure a pension owing to technicalities in the old law, are entitled to one under the amended act. All having such claims are invited to call immediately with their discharge papers upon S. C. STACY, who now has every facility for collecting such claims with promptness. Receipts given for discharge papers and all discharges carefully recorded in books kept for that purpose. Office with Judge Stacy, in Union Hall Block Tecumseh, Michigan.

GINGER.—A most excellent article, it is said, to be used during the hot weather in all kinds of cold drinks, is ginger. It was highly recommended by surgeons to the armies campaigning under a Southern sun, and was found very beneficial. Mix half a teaspoonful of the extract of ginger, in a tumbler of water, and add a teaspoonful of sugar or molasses. This will be found palatable, will quench the thirst, and will prevent the ill effects which often follow an overdose of ice-water and cooling draughts.—In the West Indies ginger is considered one of the best preventatives for the summer complaints of the tropics.

ADRIAN, Mich., Aug. 6th, 1866.

The second nine of the "Anchora" Base Ball Club, (formerly the Adrian B. B. Club,) are prepared to play any junior club, or the second nine of any senior club in the State. Also, the first nine of the clubs at Monroe, Hudson, Hillsdale or Albion. The games to come off at Adrian. This to hold good for replies from date until the 25th of this month. Address,
Secretary A. B. B. Club Adrian.

Here is a fine chance for the "Eagle." 'Pitch in boys,' and play them—you are included in the challenge.

THE STATE PRISON FILLING UP.—Our State Prison is rapidly recovering from the depletion of the war, and is likely soon to be in as crowded a condition as in ante-rebellion times. During the three months ending August 1st, 87 prisoners were received.

No Chance for Errors.

We like the way that R. C. Moore does up business. He has just gotten up a business card, with a "patent attachment" (printed at this office,) as a memorandum of goods sold, which he distributes to all who buy of him.—Always take your card, which he will give you, then you will know the quantity and price charged you, and if any error is made, (we are well informed, however, that he never makes them,) it will show for itself and may be easily corrected. We have never seen anything like it before. He is always getting up something new and tasteful, and he gives us the right to use his attachment, for all who want an elegant business card.

☞ A writer in the Journal of Commerce describes the present style of decorating ladies' heads as "fifty cents worth of straw resembling a pan cake, tied on with a ribbon, and retailed at ten dollars.

☞ The best and largest assortment of Hoop Skirts manufactured to order for Merritt, Meeker & Co. Particular attention is called to their large sizes, 40 inch band, for large women.

At Church.

At church, Joe says his manly heart
With true devotion swells,
Denying that—as some asserts—
He's led there by the belles;
While Rose, the happiest of coquettes,
Whose eye no sorrow dims,
Most piously employs her time,
In looking for the hims.

Piano for Sale.

A very fine, Seven Octave Piano,—nearly new—for sale cheap for cash. Enquire first door west of the new Presbyterian Church.

☞ The attention of the public is called to the large stock of Boots & Shoes at Merritt, Meeker & Co's. which they are closing out at Cost.

☞ Be "wide awake" on Carpets, Moore is expecting same new lots soon, get your Greenbacks ready—measure your rooms, (exact measure each way) so that you will know just the quantity you want, and buy of R. C. Moore, who is not undersold by any Ddealers in this State; we warrant this statement to be true.

☞ Pinnell, suspected of attempting to kill his wife, has been held for trial—bail fixed at $4,000.

☞ C. H. Adam & Co. are selling off Spring and Summer Goods at cost; and all kinds of Dry Goods at the lowest cash prices. A new supply of Zephyr Worsteds, Belt-pins, and other notions just received at C. H. Adam & Co.

☞ There is nothing more certain to prevent female irregularities than Dr. Velpau's Female Pills. They will in all cases cause a return of monthly sickness, without which no unmarried lady can enjoy perfect health. Sold by all Druggists.

☞ Just received from New York,—an assortment of Bleached and unbleached Cottons from thirty inches to forty five (1 1-4 yards) wide,—by R. C. Moore.

State Prison.

☞ Applegate, the local of the Adrian Times has been to Jackson, to visit the State Prison and furnishes the readers of that paper with a long article upon the Prison from which we make the following extracts:

There are at present confined in the State Prison 439 convicts, including 24 women; 26 women is the highest number of female convicts ever incarcerated in the prison. Three of the women now there are colored. Silence is inexorably maintained among the convicts. They are allowed absolutely no conversation with each other; and are allowed no communication with visitors. There are but seventeen keepers to this large number of convicts, a very inadequate number. The duty of the keeper is very arduous.—While the convicts are at work the keeper sits in a high chair overlooking them. He is not allowed to speak to visitors and holds no conversation, except such as may be necessary to direct the convicts.

L. P. REYNOLDS, Secretary.

Those wishing job work done in the neatest style and at reasonable rates are invited to give us a call.

Parties wishing to have their instruments put in first class order—will please leave their names with J. D. Robbins Jeweller.

☞ The entrance to a woman's heart is through her eye or ear! but a philosopher has said the way to a man's heart is down his throat. Good housewives understand this, and use Herrick Allen's Gold Medal Saleratus. If there are any so unfortunate as not to have tried it, go immediately to your Grocer and get a paper, and our word for it, it will make a heart as hard as adamant, soften and be joyful, and ever after will praise the seller of Herrick Allen's Gold Medal Saleratus. Everybody sells it. Depot 112 Liberty Street, New York. Try it.

☞ Nothing is more to be desired than a good appetite and to have the food digest well, the stomach and bowels in perfect order, which renders good health certain and enduring. When the appetite fails, the stomach is sour and foul, the bowels in a abnormal condition, take Coe's Dyspepsia Cure at once. It is a most excellent medicine, gives great satisfaction and is sure in its results wherever taken according to directions. We bid our friends try it with confidence.

THE HEATED TERM.

The late heated term pretty nearly reduced Dr. Holmes' Dyspeptic Dream to a reality.

I saw a roasting pullet sit
Upon a baking egg.
I saw a cripple burn his hand
Extinguishing his leg.

I saw the ox that browsed the grass,
Writhe in the blistering rays,
The herbage in his shrinking jaws
Were all a fiery blaze.

I saw a flock of hissing geese
Flying toward the icy pole,
And every mother's gosling fell,
Crisped to a crackling coal.

I saw the fishes boiled to rags,
Boh through the bubbling waves,—
I listened, and I heard the dead
All simmering in their graves.

MISS DOROTHY'S LOVER.

Well, sir, when my grandmother was first made bed-maker, Dr. A. was Master, a great scholar by all reports, but one who held his head rather too high.

The young gentlemen did not like him, no more than did the college servants; for the smallest faults of gentlemen used to be sent down, and servants dismissed. Among those most liked by the servants and the young gentlemen in general was a Mr. Bond, as handsome a man, my grandmother declared, as ever came up,—over six feet two, with black, curly hair, and a laugh that did one good to hear.

The college servants would have done anything for him, as he always spent his money like a prince, gave suppers, and never asked about perquisites, and had a cheery word for every one; and that is, after all, what they like better than anything.

There was nothing Mr. Bond couldn't do. He kept two horses, hunted in pink, rowed better than any else, sang songs of his own writing, and made love; and this leads to the sad part of my story.

Well, sir, never being at lectures, and giving wine parties, when the noise used to be so great that it could be heard in the street, was not the way to make him a favorite with the Fellows and Master. If he was loved by servants and young gentlemen, he was hated by the tutors and Masters, the latter especially; for one night, after having gated several gentlemen, his door was screwed up, and painted pea-green. Who did it no one for certain knew; but the Master and every one belived it to be Mr. Bond.

Dr. A. had a daughter, the lovliest girl ever seen; grandmother used never tire of talking of her blue eyes, bright golden hair, and a tall, slight figure; Miss Dorothy was her name.

Her mother had died when she was a child, and the poor young lady had a solitary time of it from all accounts. The Doctor was too much taken up with his books to give much time to his daughter, and too proud (for he was well born) to let her associate much with the other young ladies in the town; and so the poor girl lived a dreamy, solitary life, always looking out of the window into the court-yard, or wandering listlessly about the old home, exploring all its corners and passages.

There was no college chapel in those days, the young gentlemen used to go to St. Bennet's Church. The Master had a high pew there for his family, which was generally only occupied by Miss Dorothy, who used to come (as grandmother would say) fluttering in by herself like a pretty bird, and hide her blushing face behind the red curtains, for all the young men could not help looking at her as she came in, she was so pretty, and what is more, she knew it.

Mr. Bond, from all accounts, was not a very religious young gentleman, but not one single chapel did he ever miss, and this, I believe, saved him from being sent down on several occasions, when he got into some mad scrape. The bed-makers used to say that he went to look at Miss Dorothy, but when they first spoke to each other they did not know, though sure it is they used to meet each other. I dare say, sir, you wonder why my grandmother came to know as much as she did; but you see, sir, there was a great deal of talk at the time, and when Miss Dorothy was taken ill, my mother acted as nurse, it being vacation time. so won the sweet young lady's confidence, that she used to tell her everything, and seemed happier talking to her about the sad story than at any other time.

I told you, sir, that across the landing there was a private passage to the library; the key was kept in the Master's study, and no one was allowed to use it but he.

The first time Mr. Bond ever met Miss Dorothy was when the Master's door was screwed up. The Master sent for Mr. Bond, suspecting him, though unable to prove anything against him. The young lady and gentleman and lady met on the staircase. Miss Dorothy had often noticed Mr. Bond from her window, and seems, sir, to have taken such a fancy to him, that every hunting morning, which was Wednesday and Friday, she was at the window to see him walk through the court, looking like a prince in his red coat, and get on his splendid black horse Eagle. I remember the name, for when my father started his donkey and cart to take the clean linen home, my grandmother begged him to call it Eagle too.

Miss Dorothy, as I said before, was timid as a bird, and very shy, when she met Mr. Bond on the staircase. Trying to get quickly out of his way, she would have fallen, being tripped up by the stair-cloth, if he had not put his hand and caught her.

This was the first time that a word had passed between them, and it was only an expression of regret at her clumsiness on the one side, and pleasure on the other that he had been able to save her from a fall. Still this meeting soon led to others.

Miss Dorothy used to ride. Mr. Bond met her first as if by accident, but in time met her every day, feeing her groom handsomely each time not to reveal that his young mistress had any other companion than himself. For sometime these rides went on well enough, till one day who should they meet but the Master himself. He was driving with the Provost of King's in a close carriage, and pretended not to recognize the couple.

However, when he got back he sent for the groom, and dismissed him on the spot. Then he sent for Mr. Bond. Miss Dorothy was coming crying and pale as death out of her father's study when she met him.

"Bless you, my darling," he said, as she passed him. "It is all my own fault; cheer up; I ought to have spoken to your father before; he can't object to me as a son-in-law, I am rich and well-born, so don't cry, my pet." Then he went into the study, and she into her room.

The Master was white was white with fury when Mr. Bond entered the room.

"Sir," he said, "you are no gentlemen; you are a disgrace to the university. I shall expel you."

"And what for?" asked Mr. Bond, doing his best to restrain his passion at the insulting tones of the old man.

"What for, sir? why, insulting me: it was you who fastened up my door, you who dared to ride with my daughter."

"The first of these charges you are not in position to prove, sir," said Mr. Bond, quietly; "and the other I fancy would hardly be deemed a reasonable cause for expulsion by the university authorities, who must ratify your sentence." There was truth in this, and the Master knew it. "But," continued Mr. Bond, "I humbly beg your pardon. I have acted most wrongly; I should have spoken to you before. Your daughter loves me: may I make her my wife? and indeed, sir, you shall never repent having committed such a jewel into my keeping. For God's sake, sir, forgive us. You were a young man once, indeed, indeed—"

"Quiet, young man!" shouted the Master, who had set his mind on Miss Dorothy marrying a distant cousin, a nobleman who was then undergraduate at Trinity, and had shown her considerable attention. "Quiet. I care not for the honor you would bestow on me; leave me, sir. and never let me hear of either of you two speaking to each other again or it will be the worse for both of you."

Mr. Bond left him in a towering passion. "You have no right to separate us, nor shall you, by heaven, sir! I am in a position to support a wife, and your child is of age. Good by for the present, sir."

"Send Miss Dorothy here,' said the Master, as the butler returned from showing Mr. Bond out. The young lady came, blushing and crying.

"O dear father, forgive us both; he loves me so much, and he is so good and noble; we did not intend to keep it secret from you any longer; do, dear, good father,—it will break his heart and mine too."

"Child," said the old man savagely, "get up at once, and no more folly. You shall never speak to Mr. Bond again. Promise me never to see him again."

"O father, I dare not promise you that. God knows I would do anything else to please you, but it would be death to me and to him also. O, have pity! he loves me."

"Loves you, fool!" said the Master, "don't flatter yourself that a man so devoid of principle as he is has told many a girl the same story; he has been making a fool of you for lack of better amusement. I despise the man. Get up!" Here he laid his hands roughly on her shoulders. "Go, little fool." She rose to leave the room, pale as a statue, without saying another word. "Stop," he cried, as she reached the door. "Child, swear never to speak to that bad young man again."

"Never, father!" cried the girl, her eyes flashing with passion. "You have no cause to speak evil of Mr. Bond. He is good and noble, and I love him. I will not promise you this." Without waiting for an answer, she sailed out of the room.

But her self-possession did not last long; she ran up stairs, and threw herself on her bed (in this very room, sir,) where, when her maid came to find her, she was still crying as if her heart would break.

"O miss," said Nancy, as she came in, "what is the matter? you a-crying your eyes out, and the Master furious. And, O! I'm ashamed to tell you what he has told me to do, it is cruel like; you are not to leave the house all the week till Tuesday, when you go to your Aunt in Wales."

"So I am a prisoner, am I? and you are to be my jailer. My father is kind and considerate. Get me some tea."

Then Miss Dorothy got up, and set her things straight, and determined not to show her sorrow to her maid; but Nancy told my mother it was no good, the poor child went on terrible about her father and Mr. Bond, and never got a wink of sleep all the night.

Next morning she thought she would try once more to overcome her father's resolution, but he was incensed at her display of temper the evening before, and refused to see her.

Miss Dorothy was allowed to go into the little patch of garden where the stables used to stand. Next morning when she went out to get a breath of air, and to look at her horse, as was her custom, she found the groom who had been dismissed packing up his things to leave.

"O, I am sorry you are going to leave, Williams, and I am glad I have met you to say good by. Here's a little present for you."

Williams touched his hat as he took the sovereign. "Bless your pretty face, miss, don't care about me. Mr. Bond's taken me on to look after his hunters, and miss, (here he lowered his voice to a whisper though there was none within hearing,) my new master bade me give you this 'ere and I am not to go till I has an answer, 'no,'" says he, 'not if your old master blows your brains out.'"

Dorothy took it trembling into her room; it was only a few lines beseeching her for the love of heaven to let him see her once more. She had once told him, he wrote, that she had discovered a way from her father's house to the college library; as she was forbidden to leave the house, would she meet him there, it was their only chance.

She took a pen, and wrote a line promising to be there the moment the bells ceased to ring for evening service. As the bells ceased ringing, Miss Dorothy left her room, and went to the study, the key was in its old position, and she took it. As she passed by the window, she saw her father crossing the court-yard in his surplice. It was some time before the passage door would open, at last the latch lifted, and, hardly daring to breathe, she walked to the library door. Not daring to open it at first, she knelt down and listened, the place was still as death. In few seconds' time she heard the door open and a heavy footstep on the floor, then a voice humming a familiar air.

Without waiting longer she timidly turned the key and entered the room. What passed between the two I never heard, but the interview was interrupted by the sound of some one on the stairs. Miss Dorothy started.

"We shall be detected, George," she said, Still he held her.

"Promise, love," he said, "or I shall die."

"Yes, I promise; God forgive me," answered she. Then she closed the library door, and ran back to her room. Nancy was there arranging a dress, and started as her young mistrees entered, she looked so lovely, with her cheeks still flushing with the kiss her lover had imprinted on them, and the excitement of the meeting.

As the clock nine, Miss Dorothy stole down stairs, the hall door was open, and she was soon out of the college gates. There was no gas in the courts and streets in those days, and the porters who saw her hurry across the court, took her for one of the bed-makers. Wrapping her cloak round her, for it was a cold November night, she hurried along the street, nor did she stop till she had reached the end of Parker's Place, where a fly with two horses was waiting.

Williams, the groom, was there but no one else.

"He should have been here before, miss; clocks are striking quarter past. Get in, miss; you'll take your death of cold."

"No, thank you, Williams, I shall see him sooner here. O, dear, I wish I had not come. It is too late to go back."

"Go back! why bless you, miss, he will be here in a minute. Look there, ain't that him; no, he was to come alone."

"O yes, alone," said she, shivering and beginning to cry. "How wicked I am."

"Quiet, Miss, for Heaven's sake. Get into the fly; it's the proctors, I can see their bands, you will be suspected."

"She sprang in, and Williams lowered the shutters; the proctors were there in a minute; they had seen a woman's dress and were suspicious.

"Who have you there?" one asked as he came up.

"A lady, sir, if you have no objection."

"Any one else?" asked the other, "no member of the university too, I hope; my man, it is a suspicious place, please open the door."

The door was opened, and they looked in. Miss Dorothy sat back. and pulled the veil over her face. The moon was shining brightly, and in the proctor she recognized Mr. Hanly, the senior fellow of Corpus, who had once paid her great attentions, and who might have won her heart if she had not met Mr. Bond.

"I beg your pardon, madam," he said, raising his hat, but not recognizing her. "You must forgive the liberty I have taken, but we are forced to be very careful." Then he closed the door and walked off.

"What's the next move, miss? I fear som'uts up," said Williams, looking in as the clock struck eleven. "No doubt he's gated, and can't get out. When did you see him last?"

"About six o'clock," said the poor young lady, sobbing. "O Williams, he can't have deceived me!"

"Bless ye, no, miss, he ain't one of that sort. Why, miss, I knows for certain he'd die for you: still, it's precious queer. Says he to me at three this afternoon, 'Let the fly be ready.' Says I, 'Yes, sir; but shall I see you before night?' 'Yes,' says I. 'I'm just going to say a few words to you dear young missus, and then I shall see you But he never came, so I follers former orders, and comes up here. But, dear heart, cheer up, them great gates is shut, and the porters won't let him out. But what had we better do now, miss?"

"O, take me back, take me back!" she cried. "O, I wish I had never come. I will ask my father to forgive me; he spoke unjustly and cruelly of George, still I am very wicked. O, drive me back!"

"If I were you, miss," said Williams, "I should not go back to the college; there's no cause, as I sees, that the master should know anything about it. He thinks you safe abed, next morning you slips in with bed-makers, and no harm comes of it."

"O Williams, but then where can I sleep to-night?"

This question puzzled him, and he scratched his head in silence. At last he said, "Well, miss, s'pose you sleeps in this 'ere vehicle; I'll keep watch on the box; eh, miss?"

"O no, Williams, you know you would die of cold. I must go back; perhaps he will forgive me."

Williams went to fasten some piece of harness preparatory to starting; in a minute he returned, and lowering the window, looked in again.

"Bless you, miss, what a fool I was not to think of it afore: why, miss, you see if you goes back it must be through the porter's lodge, as the other entrance shuts early. A deal of gents may be in the court. You will not like to go by yourself; s'pose you come to my sister's, eh?"

"O no, Williams; I should die if I met any one in the court. Thank you for thinking of Mrs. Giffard; she was my nurse, and I know would have pity on me."

Well, sir, you know my grandmother's name was Giffard, and she was sister to Williams, he being my mother's uncle. Mother said she was then only ten years old, but remembered the night Miss Dorothy came to our house.

She and her father and mother slept in the same room. They had been in bed about two hours when they were awoke by a knocking at the door. My grandfather sprung up, and looked out of the window.

Grandfather threw his wife's shawl over his shoulders, and ran down stairs. In less than a minute he was back again. "For Heaven's sake, old lady, get up; here's a pretty go, poor beautiful young creature, and perishing with cold." Then he turned round to my mother who was sitting up wondering in bed, and told her to go to sleep. This my mother pretended to do, but was far too excited and curious to do more than close her eyes. Her father and mother were soon both down stairs, and the sound of a tinder-box being struck, and a fire lit, soon reached her ears. In another hour's time her father returned alone to bed, and in the next room she heard her mother trying to pacify some one who was sobbing loud enough for her to hear through the partition. After a time all was quiet again and she did not wake till her father rose; he was one of the buttery-men at Trinity.

Then she got out of bed and listened, there was more crying in the next room; she went to the bed-room door, and looked out, and saw a tall young lady, very beautiful and pale as snow, pass hurriedly along the passage followed by my grandmother.

Mother says she never saw a lily of the valley without thinking of Miss Dorothy, as she looked then, so frail and trembling, with her white face bent down.

The master had discovered his daughter's flight, and was beside himself with passion. Grandmother knew this the night before. and was not so much surprised that Miss Dorothy had come to her house at that late hour as she would otherwise have been. She was Mr. Bond's bed-maker, and going to his room about chapel-time, she had noticed his portmanteau looked and lying on his bed, but had seen nothing of him. He had not slept in the colloge, and no one knew anything about his whereabouts. There was nothing else talked of in college but the disappearance of Mr. Bond. That Miss A. had intended to run away with him, thanks to the discreetness of my grandfather and the Master's servants, was never generally known: at last, like all other wonders, it ceased to interest any one. All knew Mr. Bond was a wild young gentleman, and cared for no one: what more likely than he should have betaken himself to his home in the north for a week's change, and had not cared to consult the college authorities on the subject? Still to Miss Dorothy, my grandmother, and others, there seemed some mystery which they could not fathom.

Nancy, the lady's maid, who slept in a little room out of her mistress's, had sat up till past three, waiting for her return. Twice, in the middle of the night, she started up, hearing something like a cry of distress coming seemingly from the college library. At first she thought it only a dream, for she was anxious and nervous about her mistress, but the next time she felt that it was more than a dream, and woke one of the maids, who sat up the rest of the night, sir, by this very same fire here, sir; but there was no more sound, so Nancy believed it to be a dream, till what was discovered afterwards proved it to be no fancy. Well, sir, I need not tell you that the Master was furious about Miss Dorothy; at first he threatened to turn her out into the streets, but his pride prevented him doing this, as all the university would have known his disgrace, so he wrote off to his sister in Wales, begging her at once to come and take her back with her, and in the mean time strictly forbade her to leave the house. At the time of which I am speaking, the Master's house ran along the west side of the old college library, and there were two small oak-panelled rooms at the end of the east corridor, which were separated from the rest of the house. In these rooms Miss Dorothy was confined; they were well suited for the purpose, for there was but one means of escape, and that was actually through the Master's study, which had a door opening on to the farther end of the passage.

Poor child! she was miserable indeed, and Nancy, her maid, hardly liked to leave her alone for a minute, she was so low and nervous. One evening Nancy had to go out into the town and Miss Dorothy was left alone.

It was getting dusk, and the solitude of the dark old room frightened her. It seems that the library was connected with her bedroom by means of a small door opening in the panel. This door was not visible from the library, as it was covered by another thicker door, which was covered with books, and was not distinguishable from the rest of the walls. Miss Dorothy had noticed the door in her room, a door which had not been used for years, and of the existence of which I believe the Master himself was not aware. As she wandered about the room, feeling too nervous to sit still, her eyes fell upon an old fashioned key lying in the corner of an oak cupboard. Taking it in her hand, she determined to try the door on the opposite wall that she had watched the morning before.

Grandmother happened to be that evening in the housekeeper's room, when suddenly she heard a piercing cry,—a cry she says, she can never forget, so full of horror was it.

She started to her feet, and just at that minute Nancy dashed into the room. "O, did you hear it!" she cried. "Come with me, come with me. All three started off, pale as death, and met the Master, who had heard the scream, hurrying, in the same direction. They opened the door, Mrs. Brown the housekeeper bearing a light. On the floor, pale and rigid as marble, lay Miss Dorothy, the door in the panel open, and just in front of her, and across her feet, lay Mr. Bond, his hands stretched out and clenched, rigid and cold as a statute, as if to embrace her, his once handsome eyes staring lustreless from their sockets, and the marks of corruption already on his beautiful face.

An inquest was held on the body of Mr. Bond, and the verdict returned was accidental death. It seems that the poor young gentleman, knowing that as an undergraduate he had no right in the library, after Miss Dorothy had left him, seeing one of the bookshelves swing back, had retired behind it. It was the librarian who was entering, the shelves of the door were empty, and he filled them with the large volumes that lay on the table, and then left the room.

When the room was empty Mr. Bond no doubt tried to leave his hiding place, but the door closed with a hasp, and the heavy books that had been placed on the shelves rendered all his attempts to force it open vain, and, what is more excluded the air, for the doctors all agreed that the cause of death was suffocation. The door the young lady opened corresponded with the door in the bookcase, and when the double doors were closed there was just room for a man to stand up between them. The body, which was in a standing position, fell down at the wretched lady's feet as she opened the door in the panel.

And this, sir, is the story as my grandmother used to tell it, and many were those among the servants who rejoiced when the old library was pulled down; unearthly noises and screams, it was said, were often heard there, and indeed, sir, there were several who declared that they had seen Miss Dorothy herself more than once in her shroud, kneeling and lifting up a skeleton hand before the door which had made a living tomb for her love.

Cyrus W. Field and the Cable.

There is an unwritten history of the connection of Mr. Field with the Atlantic cable that may have a peculiar interest at this time. Mr. Field desired to change his business, and looked around for some sphere for his peculiar talent. He called one day on Moses Taylor, one of our wealthy and public-spirited men, and proposed to open a new line of railroad across the Isthmus, and so create a new line to California. This new project was open, in the mind of Mr. Taylor to serious objections, and, so far as he was concerned, was abandoned. Soon after Mr. Field called again; he had now a project, he said, that was not open to the objections stated by Mr. Taylor, and to which Mr. Field asked attention. It was to purchase the telegraph lines in the Provinces, and connect them with the United States. The company held a valuable charter from the New Brunswick Parliament. It was unable to carry on business, and the whole franchise could be purchased at a small cost, and when put in complete repair, would prove a valuable investment. The charter was examined, and found not to be satisfactory. But it was said if the charter could be changed and amended, and the lines put at a low price, the purchase would be made. Mr. Field agreed to visit New Brunswick, and obtain the changes needed in the charter, and to do this it paid $1,000 and his expenses. The desired alterations were made. Moses Taylor, Peter Cooper, Marshall O. Roberts, Wilson G. Hunt, and C. W. Field put in the sum of $10,000 each, and became the Company.

The success of this line did not equal the anticipations of the new company. It seemed likely to be a failure. The boats had agreed to stop at the telegraph stations, to and from Europe. They did so for a time. But the fog made the stopping at times dangerous, and ships refused to call, and so business seemed to take its flight from the line. Soon, Mr. Field met the company with a new suggestion, why not lay a cable across the Atlantic, and so be independent of steamships and steam companies? Mr. Field was full of it then, as he has been ever since. He won over his little company. He obtained subscriptions to stock. He crossed the water on the one great mission that now filled his soul, and to which he has since devoted his life.

Mr. Field began the work of raising money in London. He had to stretch out his hands and lift up his voice to a gainsaying people. He put a coil of ocean cable about his neck, and went from banker to banker, from capitalist to capitalist, working day by day, never weary, never disheartoned by refusals. Persecuted or repulsed in one place, he went to another. He gained his point day by day till the first cable was sent down to its ocean bed.

The first failure was repaired, and the second cable took the place of the last one. Weary and sad, but with strong faith in the ultimate success of the work, Mr. Field came home after the second attempt to lay the cable. Few spoke words of cheer or hope. The little company who had raised the infant $10,000 up to among the fifties and the hundreds of thousands, had no more they wanted cast into the depth of the sea. They regarded the thing as impracticable, and wanted to hear no more about the cable. But Mr. Field told the gentlemen that he would never give it up—while he lasted he would renew the attempt till it was a success. Like Peter the Hermit he began the new crusade. Partly from pity, partly from love of the pluck Mr. Field displayed, from one cause or another, quite a liberal subscription was obtained for the third attempt.

England was more obdurate than America. No man wanted to see the face of Mr. Field, and he was made to know that fact. Doors were closed against him. Millionaires would not hear him talk. Some thought his tongue like that of the charmer, and fled from his approach. He was regarded as an enthusiast merely. But steadily Mr. Field proceeded. He went where he was not wanted. He came at odd times and in odd places—in the counting-house and at the country seat; in the city home and in the mart of trade. He gained his point. Some were convinced; some wanted to get rid of the importunity; some were willing to throw away a small sum because they liked the persistency of the man; a few had their waning faith revived, and, like the old hunter Henry Clay told of, were willing to pick flint and try again. But Mr. Field cared not for motives so long as he had funds, and the two continents were united.

By the side of Fulton, who started in his little boat up the Hudson, amid the jeers of the multitude, who expected and wished a failure; by the side of Goodyear, in poverty and reproach pursuing his marvelous inventions to their completion; by the side of Morse, who, in the packet-ship on the ocean, while conversing with a Boston physician, announced that he could send a message around the world, and was laughed at for his avowal, Mr. Field will now take his place among the world's benefactors, because of his success.

—The "water shoe" man, who has a boat on each foot and slides himself over the surface of the water with a paddle, has made a match to race on the Harlem river, in a few weeks, with a double scull boat, two and a half miles and return, for $2,000.

The break in the telegraph line to Europe being the passage into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, some eighty miles from the extreme northeastern point of Nova Scotia to Port Basques, at the extreme western point of Newfoundland, still remains uncompleted. The delay creates much dissatisfaction and seems to be without any good cause. In the meantime the dispatches continue to be brought over by steamers.

Various prominent Congressmen have been receiving warm welcome from their constituents upon their return home, the most notable instances of which, at the West, have been those of Senator Trumbull, at Crosby's Opera House in Chicago, last week, and of Senator Howe, at Milwaukee, on the 7th. Speaker Colfax has also been warmly greeted, and has made several eloquent speeches.

A tremendous battle is imminent in Abyssinia between the King, Theodore II., and Gubassie, who aspires to the crown, and has risen in opposition to the despotism of Theodore. Yahro-Medina, the General of Gubassie, has placed the province of Tigre under contributions of men, horses, animals of all kinds, provisions, and money. Both parties are making great preparations for war. According to the statements of the Abyssinians, there will be not less than 150,000 combatants upon the field of battle.

European advices by the Atlantic cable, to the 5th inst., state that the Prussian army, before the armistice had been extended to Bavaria, had secured a good footing in that State, where they are forcing a paper currency upon the people. By the agreement the Prussians are to occupy Wurtburg, but the Bavarians are to retain the fortress of Mentz. Additional news by the steamer City of Boston announces that the Prussian Government has made a demand upon the English Government for the treasure, 1,250,000 thalers, carried off by the King of Hanover in his flight, and deposited in the Bank of England, asserting that she will retain the Hanoverian domain if it is not given up.....The Paris Patrie announces that a Mexican army, 50,000 strong, recruited in Mexico, and officered by Europeans, will take the place of the French troops and maintain Maximilian on his throne.

Dispatches from Europe, by the Atlantic cable, dated Monday evening, state that the King of Prussia had returned to Berlin. In reply to the address of the municipality, he pointed out that Prussia had drawn the sword not only for her independence, but for the re-organization of Germany. The King in person opened the Prussian chambers, and made a long speech on the condition of affairs. Prussia has positively declined the proposals of Russia for a congress of the powers which signed the treaty at Vienna. New efforts were being made to obtain the intervention of Russia with Prussia in behalf of the South German States. Special peace regulations were about to be opened between Prussia and Saxony. It was expected that a definite treaty of peace would soon be signed by the Austrian and Prussian plenipotentiaries at Prague. Italy is not included, and if the difficulty relative to the armistice with the kingdom were not arranged within a few days, hostilities would be re-commenced.

Dispatches from Europe, by the Atlantic cable, dated Saturday the 4th, state that martial law has been proclaimed in lower Austria, and also in Venice, Prussia and Wirtemburg. The peace conference is to be held at Prague. The conditions of peace, as agreed upon, are that Austria shall withdraw from the German confederation, lose Venetia, and her part of Schleswig-Holstein, and pay to her adversaries $10,000,000 for war expenses. The German states north of the Maine are to form a union under the guidance of Prussia, and those south of that river to form an independent union. The Prussian troops had entered Manhiem and Heidelburg. Edwin M. Chambers, son of the clergyman in the little town of Oshtemo, near Kalamazoo, Mich., and only 21 years old, after courting a young lady 17 years old, went over to Bedford, near Detroit, and after a few weeks courtship, married another girl. He spon "tore himself away," and returned to Oshtemo, where six weeks after his first marriage, he was married (?) to his former flame, his father innocently officiating at the farce. Six months passed before his perfidy was discovered, when he fled, but was captured last week at Saginaw. Being a long, slim and slender young man he managed to crawl out of the feed hole of his cell, and escaped, is good looking and has dark curly hair. Look out for him!

There were 239 deaths in New York from cholera during the week ending August 4th. It is since reported to be decreasing.

Collector Thomas, of Philadelphia, Pa., refuses to be removed by the President, and intends to test the matter legally.

At the New York Saratoga Convention, Senator Doolittle addressed the meeting. He said that in dealing with the problems which peace brought, we should follow in the footsteps of Lincoln—"With charity for all, malice towards none." He thought the South had been sufficiently punished. Now was the time for magnanimity. Andrew Johnson had changed with the changed attitude of the people, and so would all the good patriots. He would yet be found to be, through the American people, as magnanimous in peace as he was powerful in war.

Accidents in Wisconsin.

The Wisconsin papers of last week report the following accidents, and it wasn't a good week for accidents, either:

The Broadhead Independent reports that a little boy named Staat, living two miles north of that town, was killed by falling some twelve feet from a tree which he had climbed.

The Milwaukee Sentinel reports that a boy of fourteen, while out hunting, attempted to climb a tree on the premises of Wm. P. Lynde, Esq., just outside the city limits, but when he had reached the height of about thirty feet, he fell to the ground. His injuries were so severe that he died within twenty-four hours.

The Stoughton (Wis.) Reporter records a a singular death. A man was mowing, in company with another, and, seeing a storm approaching, took his scythe from the snath and ran to avoid getting wet. He stumbled and fell upon the point of the scythe, driving it into his body in the region of the liver several inches. He lived but a few moments.

The Green Bay Gazette records the death of a boy named Garsan, in Reed's saw mill at Depere. He was playing about the machinery in the lower part of the mill, and was caught in a belt connected with the main shaft, which whirled him around with fearful rapidity, instantly tearing both arms off, and severing both legs below the knee. One of the crew of the schooner Milwaukee Belle died in consequence of a severe sunstroke at Suamico.

The Beaver Dam Argus tells of a shocking affair in the town of Westford. A little child, about seven years old, of Mr. Petess, was pounced upon by an ugly hog, and had its abdomen so badly torn that the bowels protruded. The child somehow escaped from the hog, and walked about half a mile to a neighbor's, when its condition was discovered. A physician was called, but his services were unavailing, and the child died in a few hours.

The Baraboo Independent records a most melancholy and fatal accident at Dellona: Dr. S. Cady, a resident of Dell Prairie, was on a visit with his family at his father's, in Dellona, on Thursday. The old gentleman had caught a skunk in a trap, and the Doctor had been shooting at it with a revolver—a sixteen repeater—and was in the act of passing the instrument over to his father when one of the loads discharged, and the ball passed through the heart of his little son, eight or nine years of age, killing him almost instantly.

SAYS the New York Citizen: "The best and boldest swimmer at Long Branch last Sunday was the venerable Thurlow Weed. Disregarding the rope, and disregarding all warnings about the undertow, he struck out squarely, as if for the destination of Valentia bay, in Ireland; but thought better of it when a good deal less than half across, and came back with lusty strokes to attend the Philadelphia Convention."

SALT.

Dr. R. B. Trall, the well known editor of the Herald of Health, concludes his connection with that paper by a spicy article on what he regards as the great popular poison —salt. We present the substance of the essay:

When we adopted the principles of Hygeio-Therapy—just a quarter of a century ago the present month—we discontinued at once the use of all seasonings which did not possess alimentary properties—salt, mustard, pepper, vinegar, etc. For a year we did not taste of them, and then we began to realize what food was, as God designed and Nature produced it. We found it to possess gustatory properties which we had never before been conscious of. We could make a luscious meal on bread, apples, potatoes, cabbage, beets, parsnips, spinach, or almost anything else that was properly eatable, with no particle of condiment, with more pleasure than we formerly could on all the complicated dishes of a first class hotel, with the addition of all the seasonings of a first class restaurant. Afterward, when we occasionally tasted of them by way of experiment, or partook of them from the necessity of the case when absent from home, the effect was invariably more or less disturbance of the digestive organs, with thirst, feverishness and other symptoms of poisoning. We have studied and observed the effects of seasonings upon people generally, but more especially upon invalids, for twenty-five years, nearly all of which time we have had one or two houses full of patients, some of whom used a little salt, while others used none, and our conclusion has been strengthening every year that salt is an exceedingly pernicious article.

We believe their dietetic employment is the chief primary cause of gluttony, intemperance and debauchery. We are well aware how radical and ultra (and all truth is both radical and ultra) these opinions will be regarded by those who cannot relish food without salt, and by a medical profession whose only rules for interpreting the volume of Nature are their own morbid appetences and the kitchen of a fashionable restaurant. Very few persons of the present day can enjoy food of any kind without the addition of salt, mustard, vinegar or pepper; and a majority of those who are regarded as "good livers" (and who are sure to have torpid livers and irritable kidneys) seldom take a dinner without using all of them. Butter is almost as commonly used as salt. Thousands of American children are taught to eat almost as much butter as bread, and the result is seen in bile-humors, scrofula and erysipelas. The quantity of salt, butter and sugar consumed dietetically by the civilized world is immense; and although the great majority of people regard them as indispensable—especially salt—they would be vastly better off if there were no such things in existence. They are not only useless, but pernicious; indeed, they are a fruitful source of disease and premature decay. The effect of all seasonings—and this remark applies with a special emphasis to salt—is to render the mucous surfaces dry and inflammatory, the blood putrescent, the secretions deficient and depraved, and the fibres rigid and inelastic. In this condition there is more friction, more wear and tear of the organic machinery. If they do not induce fatal disease, they cause the vital structures to wear out sooner. Indeed, no person can by any possible effort perform as much bodily or mental labor while using seasonings as he can (other circumstances being equal) without them.

The direct cost of these articles is as insignificant item in comparison with the loss of health and strength and the abbreviation of human life which they occasion, and the many other unphysiological and pernicious habits to which they lead. The desire for intoxicating drinks and for all fictitious beverages, mineral waters, root beer, tea, coffee, etc., is chiefly attributable to morbid thirst induced by salt and other seasonings. This subject has an especial importance with Vegetarians, who are striving to induce the people to return to "the natural food of man," for salt is apt to be the article that they hold on to with more pertinacity than to anything else which is not in some sense food. A few words, therefore, on the scientific aspect of the question:

Salt is a mineral poison. This fact alone ought to settle the whole question of its dietetic use or abuse. But, unfortunately, led on by the false teachings of the medical professions, the world has come to regard poisons as useful, nay as indispensable, not only as medicines, but as victuals and drink. Witness alcohol, cod-liver oil, preparations of iron, etc. Salt is in no sense food more than is alcohol, arsenic or corrosive sublimate. It is wholly indigestible. It can supply no element to the tissues. It cannot be assimilated. It is passed through the system unchanged, as are other indigestible and poisonous substances. We do not here forget the constant iterations of medical authors and physiological scribblers that salt is useful, necessary and indispensable; that it supplies an element (chlorine) for the formation of the hydrochloric acid of the gastric juice; that it supplies the soda of some of the secretions and excretions, saliva, bile, etc.; but as these statements are nothing but statements—mere assertions without a particle of proof—and susceptible, moreover, of absolute disproof, we will not here argue the points involved. We will do better. We will give the reader a rule which will enable him to determine for himself, to a positive demonstration, whether salt belongs to the category of food or of poison. He has only to take a meal of bread at one time, a meal or dose of salt at another, and a meal or dose of arsenic at another. He will find that the effects of the the salt are in all respects analogous to those of the arsenic, and in no respect analogous to those of the bread. Arsenic, in appreciable doses, occasions thirst, heat, pain, redness and swellings. These are symptoms of disease—inflammation. And this inflammation, in degree, intensity and danger, corresponds always and precisely with the quantity of the drug taken, be it arsenic or salt. Arsenic, in very small doses, is regarded as a beneficial tonic—a supporting and strengthening agent, which, by the way, has never been claimed for salt. Bread will not occasion these symptoms of inflammation, taken in any quantity.

It has been known for centuries that salted aliments were conducive to acrid humors, a putrescent state of the blood and scurvy. In putrid fevers, and in all diseases in which there is well-marked putrescent tendency in the fluids, the use of salt has long been prohibited by intelligent physicians. Nearly all medical writers of respectability condemn salted meats for dyspeptics, and, generally, for all chronic invalids. How, then, can salt be wholesome for well folks?

The thirst which salt occasions demands the drinking of large quantities of water; but the salt so inflames the mucous membrane, and so paralyzes the normal sensibilities of the organic instincts of the digestive viscera, that pure water is flat and insipid, thus making the way for something stronger. Food, also, "has no taste," unless rendered pungent or rank and unnatural with seasonings or gravies, of which salt and grease are the leading ingredients. The salivary secretion is rendered deficient in quantity by the constant irritation of these acrid poisons, so that its solvent properties are diminished or lost. The gastric and pancreatic juices are affected in the same way, and every secretion of the body is more or less depraved. "Follicular inflammation," or sore throat, which is becoming as common as dyspepsia, is as much to be attributed to salt as to any one thing that can be named. And this tender and painful condition of the mouth, throat and alimentary canal, renders mastication unpleasant, and proper mastication impossible, so that food is washed down with hot coffee in the morning, cold water at noon, and warm tea in the evening, thus adding insult to injury, and not unfrequently stronger and worse beverages are taken with the victuals. Under these circumstances there is a tendency to substitute soft dishes and spoon victuals for solid food, and a large proportion of people can hardly make a satisfactory meal without toast, shortened biscuit, soup, mush, or slop or slush of some kind, and the result is they lose their teeth. If any one will notice the swarms of young persons of both sexes who are thronging the dentists on every block for artificial teeth, he will know that something extraordinary is working the ruin of those very useful as well as ornamental parts of the osseous structure. If this rotting process goes on with the teeth for a few generations longer, as rapidly as it is now proceeding, nothing less than a miracle can save the generations of a not very distant future from being constitutionally toothless. The teeth will run out. And if we were to name the article that contributes more than any other one article to the wide spread and wider spreading destruction of the human teeth, we should say—SALT.

Nothing more surely conduces to morbid cravings and perverted appetences than the use of salt. It provokes the desire to eat even when the stomach is filled to repletion, and thus is the sure precursor to gluttony. Children who are fed on unsalted food, and never incline to overload their stomachs, except in cases where they have inherited abnormal conditions. Those who cannot see it their duty to forego the use of salt, or who are not willing to crucify the acquired appetite in themselves, ought so to teach and train their children that they will prefer food without it.

—There are over seventy telegraph offices in New York city, with a force of 375 persons; there are now thirty wires between Washington and New York, and nearly one hundred wires leave the city of New York. The American and Western Union have about 2,000 offices, with 5,000 employees.

—The editor of a Western paper observes: "The poem which we publish in this week's Herald was written by an esteemed friend who has lain many years in his grave for his own amusement.' On the other hand an eastern editor expresses great indignation at the manner in which a woman, who had committed suicide, was buried: "She was buried like a dog with her clothes on."

—A German newspaper gives the following account of a "terrible scene;" "A carpenter returning home from a long journey, found his wife dying, his child dead, and an order to join the army pinned to the door. The combination of misfortune so overcame the wretched man that he fell to the ground in a fit and died a few minutes after. His wife's body soon followed him to the grave."

—The Oswego (N. Y.) Times reports the brutal whipping of a lad about twelve years of age by his father, a man named Euphrates Lake, of that city. Lake is a Seventh-day Baptist, and whipped his son in a shocking manner because he did not want to work on Sunday, when told to do so by his father. It is said that a short time ago the same man turned out of doors his daughter, fifteen years old, because she would not work on Sunday.

—A most remarkable temperance lecture was delivered in New York recently by Dr. Crane, at the meeting of the Board of Health. The lecture was as follows: "In the Stygian and pest-ridden Twelfth Ward of Brooklyn, not a solitary one of the 500 members of the Father Matthew Society, resident therein, has been attacked by the cholera." Mr. Acton clinched this remark by adding that not a cholera case had yet occurred among the 16,000 members of the Father Matthew society in New York.

—The New York Nation takes the very sensible ground that we need a general marriage law, applicable to the whole country, as much and more than we need a general bankrupt law. "All American men and women," it says, "ought to be married, and all American children to be born under the same law. It may be added that so lax are the laws of divorce in some of the States, that the Reverend Dr. Hovey, of Newton, has lately published a little volume in which the Christian law of divorce is made obligatory on all Christians, any in the laws of the States to the contrary notwithstanding. By this rule crime or death can alone dissolve the marriage relation."

—The Beaver, (Penn.) Argus says: "J. T. Boyd, Esq., of this place, while at work in his garden on the 2d of May last, found a piece of gold coin which weighs within two pennyweights of an ounce, which bears the date of A. D. 529. This makes the coin, incredible as it may seem, 1,337 years old. The coin itself is a Spanish piece, and was found in the ground on which old Fort McIntosh stood. It is supposed to have been carried to this place by some one of the officers at one time quartered in the Fort. Mr. Boyd has refused fifty dollars for his relic, and prefers to hold on to it himself. It is certainly a quaint piece of money, and has an age that reaches a great distance back."

—The St, Paul Press says there is a soldier in that city who has lost both arms and both feet. His name is Benjamin Franklin of Blue Earth city. He served in the one-year regiment of mounted rangers, and afterwards re enlisted in the second cavalry, and with that regiment joined Gen. Sully's great expedition of 1864. In December last, while stationed at Fort Wadsworth he started home on furlough, and was caught in the great storm of the 11th of the month while near Big Stone Lake. He became detached from his team, got lost, and wandered into a ravine, wherein two of his companions froze to death. Franklin, however, pushed on with the storm, the wind blowing from the northwest, and he traveled eight days in his tremendous struggle for life. At the end of that time he was picked up by a couple of Indian scouts, who had been sent out by the Government to look for the lost men. On reaching Fort Ridgely, Franklin was compelled to submit to the amputation of both his hands and feet.

—The bricklayers of Omaha have struck for the unconscionable sum of six dollars per day and all work is stopped. At Portland, where the late fire has created a demand for all classes of labor, a general strike for exorbitant pay has been met by a cessation of the help the strikers were receiving from generous people elsewhere. Under the same head of labor movements deserves to be noted the late address of the locomotive engineers, an organization four thousand strong, issued to railroad managers, agreeing to submit any kind of difference that may arise on any subjects, such as wages, or other serious questions, or all matters that in the least endangers the stopping of the road, to arbitration. They say let the company choose a number (to be agreed upon) of trustworthy officials from other roads—the engineers to do the same. If they cannot agree then, to have power to choose some disinterested outside party, and in this way settle all disputes. In doing this, you forever prevent the possibility of a strike, and this ought to be an inducement sufficient to warrant you in making the experiment.

—"The anti-rent troubles are owing to the misplaced and unwise leniency of the late General Stephen Van Rensselaer, of Albany. His large tracts of land east of Albany, in the now anti-rent districts, were divided into farms, and leased to the farmers at very low rents. The farmers came to him every year with long faces about poor crops, and asked him to wait till next year for the rent. Mr. Van Rensselaer was liberal and kind, and let the rent remain unpaid. The next year, and for many years, the story was just the same, and the patron very imprudently consented to let the debt go on accumulating. He should have either made them pay as their rents came due (like John Jacob Astor,) or he should have given them the debt. But he did neither; and at his death in January, 1839, he left all these unpaid rents, as so much good property, to his children, and when the farmers were called upon to pay their back rents of 10, 15 or 20 years' standing, they said at once, 'Your father did not require us to pay rent, and we will not pay you.' Hence it is seen that the misplaced lenity of Mr. Van Rensselaer is the cause of all the anti-rent troubles in Albany county the last 20 years."

—M. de Bismark arrived at Horzitz on the night of the great battle. No preparations had been made for the accommodation of the headquarters, which were established in the morning at Gitschin. He was hungry and weary, but all the houses were closed. There was no bread, and all the straw that could be had was used for the wounded. In this state of things the president of the council lay down on the pavement of the place of Horzitz, and without a pillow, slept that pleasant sleep which the soldier who has won a victory knows.

—A singular accident recently occurred on the Lyons railway, near Mormant, France. A watchman named Prestat had returned to his post at about three in the morning after having accompanied his wife to a neighboring fete, and, feeling fatigued, he sat down on the top of the embankment which skirts the line. There he fell asleep and slipped on to the permanent way in such a manner that his right leg lay across the outer rail. While in that position a train passed and severed the limb below the knee, and also injured the left heel. Strange to say, the man does not appear to have been immediately aware of the accident, and only discovered his situation when he awoke and attempted to get up. He then called for assistance, and was removed to the nearest hospital, where amputation of the right leg was found to be necessary.

WAR STATISTICS.—The interesting topic of the comparative ages of the volunteers in the late war is elaborately discussed in a report made by Dr. B. A. Gould, Actuary of the Sanitary Commission, and just published as a pamphlet. Dr. Gould's calculations are made upon the original volunteer regiments, excluding recruits, drafted men, and substitutes, that joined after the regiments were in the service. The aggregate of the rank and file of these regiments was one million twelve thousand and seventy-three men. It is an interesting fact that, among these, soldiers of 18 years old outnumbered those of every other age. Younger boys were also not wanting. There were 127 of only 13; 330 of 14; and 773 of 15; and those who were familiar with the armies can testify that these youngsters were almost always among the very roughest and most daring soldiers; and many of the most audacious feats of individual bravery which the records of the war preserve were theirs. But let us condense Dr. Gould's table of ages:

Ages.	Number.	Ages.	Number.
18	133,475	26	40,043
19	90,215	27	34,290
20	71,038	28	35,312
21	67,136	29	24,513
22	73,391	30	28,360
23	62,717	30 to 40	156,432

.....An ardent temperance man was talking to a crowd of drinkers at Sahron Springs, telling them of the awful effects of drinking ardent spirits. A noted toper in the crowd said: "Now, Mister, I just want to tell you why I take a dram occasionally. I knew a man once that believed exactly as you did; never drank anything but cold water. He died suddenly, as the doctor said, of apoplexy; but when they came to open him they found him full of icicles!"

.....'Simple, yet beautiful,' as the monkey said when he painted his tail sky blue.

Cold Drinks in Hot Weather.

The tendency of individuals affected by the extreme heat of the present time is to an excessive indulgence in cold drinks, without much reference to the quantity or quality of the fluid they imbibe. So long as they can take a cold drink, a majority of the people care very little what they drink; although physicians and sensible people are aware that many people are annually killed by a too frequent or injudicious use of cooling beverages during the heated term. For the benefit of our readers, we recently applied to an eminent physician for an opinion on the subject, and a prescription that would most readily meet the requirements of thirsty people during the warm weather. The doctor's sudden and emphatic ejaculation of "ginger" relieved us from the apprehension that he was about to enter upon a lengthy dissertation on the subject of "deaths from an overdose of ice water," ending with a prescription combining a dozen or more drugs, to be taken as a substitute for the popular cooling draughts.

"Ginger," said the doctor, "I consider the very best article, most easily procured and least expensive for all persons to employ. By its proper use they may have cold water in abundance, and at the same time avoid most, if not all, the ill effects produced by the cooling abominations a great many people pour down their throats this hot weather." "Tell your readers," continued the physician, "to buy a few ounces of powdered ginger, and every time they are thirsty, let them mix half a teaspoonful in the cold water they desire to drink. If a teaspoonful of sugar or molasses is added, it will do no harm. 'Extract of ginger' may also be employed by those who prefer the article in a fluid form. A bottle of the extract should be placed near the ice pitcher or cooler, and when people drink let them pour a teaspoonful of the extract in their tumbler, before filling it with water. For my use," said the doctor, "I prefer the powdered article, because I believe it acts more beneficially. In the West Indies this root is considered one of the best preventives for the summer complaints of the tropics, when it is properly used, and not abused."—N. Y. Sun.

Metropolitan Hotel, Chicago.—Our old friend Skinner, has transferred his right, title and interest in this popular hotel, to the present proprietors, Messrs. Baldwin & Merritt—gentlemen who will add still greater prestige to the reputation it has always enjoyed, and who know equally well how to keep a hotel. Its location (on the corner of Randolph and Wells) is admirably suited to the convenience of business men whether as transient visitors or permanent boarders. Its rooms are commodious and well furnished, its beds clean and luxurious, its table loaded with the substantials and delicacies of the season, its cuisine faultless, and its waiters prompt, courteous and attentive to the wants of the guests. The proprietors spare no pains to make their patrons feel comfortable and at home. They attend strictly to every detail of their business, no remissness or inattention escaping their vigilant scrutiny. The Metropolitan under their efficient management is every day growing in popularity and amply merits the generous patronage it is receiving from all parts of the Northwest.—Western Railroad Gazette.

DISCOVERY OF THE AGE!

Farmers, Families, and others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr. Tobias' Venetian Liniment for dysentery, colic, croup, chronic rheumatism, sore throat, toothache, sea-sickness, cuts, burns, swellings, bruises, old sores, headache, mosquito bites, pains in the limbs, chest, back, &c. If it does not give relief, the money will be refunded. All that is asked is a trial, and use it according to the directions.

DR. TOBIAS—Dear Sir: I have used your Venetian Liniment in my family for a number of years, and believe it to be the best article for what it is recommended that I have ever used. For sudden attack of the cromp it is invaluable. I have no hesitation in recommending it for all the uses it professes to cure. I have sold it for many years, and it gives entire satisfaction. CHAS. DR. T. ALLCOCK—Dear Sir: Seventeen years ago I was sorely injured in my back. At length I was induced to use your plasters. I wore one constantly for six months, and did more hard work during that six months than in the preceding fifteen years. I have not worn a plaster for over eighteen months, and have had no return of the gnawing pain and weakness in my back, but have been entirely well.

CHAMBERLAIN'S IMMEDIATE RELIEF—A Tonic and Pain Killer, is the most valuable and cheapest family medicine in the world, will certainly cure, and if used in time will prevent, the following diseases, as can be proved by nearly one thousand letters from persons who have used the medicine: Cholera Morbus, Asiatic Cholera, Cramps, Colic, Coughs, Croup, Catarrh, Congestion, Colds, Cuts, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Diptheria, Fever, Rheumatism, Fever and Ague, Neuralgia, Inflammation, Spasms, Sprains, Toothache, Earache, Headache, Backache, in short, wherever pain or soreness exists, either internal or external, there apply the medicine, and the patient will receive immediate relief.

It is the best! In 1849 and in 1854 this medicine cured many thousands seized with cholera, and its timely use as a preventative saved millions of lives.

It is the cheapest! One thirty-five cent bottle of this medicine will cure more complaints than one hundred dollars spent in employing doctors. The thirty-five cent bottle is as large as a fifty cent bottle of any other medicine.

It is warranted! One bottle of this medicine can be had of my agents, and the privilege given the purchaser of using one-half the contents on trial, and if it does not prove satisfactory the money will be refunded.

No family should be without it!

Dealers may tell you they have something else as good, but do not be deceived—ask for Chamberlain's Relief and take no other.

Strength for the Exhausted.

Thousands die, as it were, inch by inch, of bodily weakness; for debility will kill as certainly, though not so quickly, as a raging fever. Is it asked how the weak shall be made strong: the debilitated sustained and restored; the exhausted refilled with vital energy? We aver that of all invigorating preparations given by science to man, from the institution of the art of healing to the present hour, not one has wrought such wonders in the way of restoration as HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS. This is indeed the tonic of tonics. As a revitalizing, strength-supporting, life-prolonging agent, the like of it is not to be found in the catalogue of medicines. Among the various articles used to arouse the dormant powers of nature, it stands alone—the great awakener of the paralyzed physique. It not only awakens the physical powers from a state of collapse and inanition, but it imparts permanent vigor to the muscular and nervous systems—reinforcing, as it were, both the stronghold and the outworks of vitality. The aged, the decrepid, the nervous, the broken-down of both sexes, are recommended to try it. They will assuredly find it a present help in time of trouble.

WE copy the following from the Chicago Tribune of July 30th:—"Soldiers' Bounties under the new law can be obtained on application to Col James W. Boyden, No. 92 La Salle street, formerly Government Agent for paying pensions at Chicago. Soldiers and the widows, minor children, or parents of deceased soldiers, can obtain additional bounty on application to him personally."....Claimants will please to mail discharge to his office. A receipt will be given and it will be returned with the bounty. It will be well for claimants to preserve this paper, or cut out this notice.

THE ONLY REALLY ADJUSTABLE CANE MILL!

Long Tried and Well Liked!

HIGHEST ENCOMIUMS

FROM PRESS AND PUBLIC EVERYWHERE!

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST!

THE LEVER PRINCIPLE IN OUR MILLS IS the only practicable and reliable mode yet applied for giving adjustability to Sugar Cane Crushers, and the lever and weight is, and must always be, the simplest and most unvarying power. With it the cane is pressed drier with less power and less liability of breakage than by any other mode. These Mills have been before the public for several years; they are extensively used throughout the entire sorghum growing sections of the country, and wherever used have invariably given entire satisfaction. They have been much improved for the present season, and now embrace points of excellence, aside from the leading feature of the lever, which of themselves place them far ahead of any other Mill in use. We build Mills of different sizes, geared to run by steam, water or horse power; also premium Horse Powers, very simple in their construction and of great strength; also an Evaporator of our own planning, equal if not superior to anything now in use; and in fact, every article required by Sorghum Manufacturers.

OUR SORGHO HAND BOOK, containing full descriptions and illustrations of our different sized Mills and Sorghum Machinery, and embracing a treatise on the growth and manufacture of Sorghum, sent free on application.

Parties wanting our machinery should send in their orders early, as towards the close of the season we receive more orders than we can possibly fill.

HARRIS' PATENT

SELF-REGULATING

SUGAR CANE MILLS!

In these celebrated mills the CANE is made to govern the pressure, and gives a uniform pressure in proportion to the amount of cane going through the mill. The SELF-REGULATING PRESSURE removes all danger of breaking by uneven feeding, and increases the capacity fully one-third above other mills of the same size. It presses a large or small amount of cane equally dry by its own action.

Send for illustrated catalogue, containing full description of our MILLS, HORSE-POWERS, &c., also of our CELEBRATED CHAMPION EVAPORATOR, which was awarded the FIRST PREMIUM at the Wisconsin State Fair of 1865—there being the largest exhibition of sorghum machinery of any Fair yet held in the West. Suicide.

A horrible case of attempted murder and suicide occurred in Adrian last Friday, of which we clip the following account from the Adrian Times:

Scott Roberts committed suicide at half-past four, by cutting his throat with a pocket knife. He first attempted to kill his wife by firing two shots at her from a revolver, but failed. He then threw the revolver away. This was on Maumee street, just east of Mr. E. L. Clark's.

She ran down the street to the Central School yard where her father was at work and thus escaped him. Roberts followed her thus far when finding that she was beyond his reach and that he was like to be arrested, he drew from his pocket his knife and performed the deed which will end his life.

The poor unfortunate lingered along in the office of Dr. R. T. Mead, where he was taken, until 7:35 P. M., when he died. He was kept under the influence of chloroform most of the time until his death. His funeral took place in the Baptist Church yesterday, and was largely attended.

An examination into the causes which led to the commission of this crime leads to the belief that family difficulties magnified and brooded upon by an excitable and nervous temperament had so operated upon the mind of Roberts as to induce a kind of insanity, under the influence of which he attempted to shoot his wife, and, failing in this, took his own life. We understand that the pistol with which he endeavored to shoot his wife did not actually go off, but only snapped. He then, as we stated on Saturday, cut his own throat. The knife with which he committed the fatal deed was a small one, and the blade scarcely larger than that of a pen-knife, although stronger, with a sharp point. This he thrust into his throat on the left side, near the back part of the lower jaw, and drew it across to an opposite point on the right side, making a fearful gash eight and one-half inches long, and severing the windpipe entirely; as well as the branches of all the large arteries and veins in that vicinity. The determined nature of the suicide may be judged from the fact that Roberts made the gash with three distinct strokes of the knife.

After being brought to the Doctor's office, and laid on his back, the bleeding soon ceased, but the damage was already done, and no human power could have restored the life which its possesser had so rashly destroyed. Nothing could be done, medical skill was powerless, and the friends of the unfortunate could only wait and watch the final expiring of the vital flame, even then flickering so feebly.

Of course the severance of the windpipe prevented his speaking, but there is no doubt that in his moments of consciousness he fully retained the possession of his mental faculties, and heard the conversation around him. He recognized bystanders, and wrote some words on a card with a pencil. His first writing was addressed to Marshal Whitmore and conveyed the information that he had voted for that gentleman. He put the pencil to his lips to wet it, evidently from the force of habit. He wrote slowly but intelligibly. Appearing to miss the presence of his mother, he made a vain attempt to speak, but only succeeded in evoking a horrible and indistinct gurgling in his throat. Finding himself unable to articulate, he again made motions for writing materials, and on their being furnished him wrote "Where's mother?" Being informed by his brother, who sat by his side, that his mother was unavoidably absent, he wrote "Crazy?" and being answered in the affirmative again subsided into the state of semi-unconsciousness produced by chloroform. After writing his first card, he made significant gestures towards his head, as if wishing to be shot, and on being asked if that was his wish nodded his head energetically in the affirmative.

About 7 P. M., being temporarily out of the influence of the drug, he struggled fearfully, forcing the little remaining blood in his extremities to the gash in his throat, and temporarily checking his breathing, which had been carried on since the infliction of the wound entirely through the gash. At this time the gurglings in his throat were horrible in the extreme, but chloroform was soon applied, and from that time until life was extinct he rested in apparent unconsciousness

After his death the horrible wound in his throat was carefully sewed up by Dr. Mead, and the body prepared for burial.

☞ On Saturday last Mr. Charles Bidwell started with a double team and carriage to go to Macon, and while driving by the log yard at Haydens saw mill north of the village, the neck yoke became unfastened, which frightened the horses and they ran over the logs some little distance before Bidwell could stop them, nor did he succeed in checking them until they had flung him out and broken the carriage considerably. The horses did not get away, but Charley had his ancle quite severely sprained in the fracas and he has been hobbling about upon a crutch ever since. It was exceedingly fortunate that there was no more damage done.

State Agricultural Society.

Preparations are being made at Adrian for the coming State Fair on a more extensive scale than has yet been seen in this State. The buildings, which were hardly sufficient last year to accommodate all the exhibitors, are being considerably enlarged. The President and chairman of the business committee were at Adrian last week, and the superintendent of the buildings, Mr. Bush, was directed what changes and extensions to make. The workmen are now buisily employed in perfecting the extensions. The stables have been increased in numbers, and all the sheep pens are to be covered. The accommodations for cattle are being made very perfect. The Florial Hall is to have another large wing added to it, and various other changes are to being made.—The premiums have been so largely increased in all divisions, that it is expected the entries will exceed in numbers those of the last Stat Fair.

The committee in viewing the several farms entered for premiums have been busily engaged in the performance of their duties during the past two weeks, and it is expected they will complete their work during the coming week. The entries comprise farms in Oakland, Shiawassee, Clinton, Hillsdale, and Cass counties. The report of this committee will be looked for vith great interest.—The examination so far has been very thorough, and will probably elicit some very interesting facts with regard to the state of agriculture in this State.

The show of horses promises to be very large, and some of the finest horses in the country are looked for to make trial for the citizens' premiums.

Runaway's.

Last Friday evening as Mr. John Margeson was driving some cattle home from Raisin, and his little boy was driving the team a short distance behind, the team by some means got away from the boy, and started on the run for home.—They ran from where they started, near the residence of Joseph Gray—to the village, and when turning the corner by the Baptist Church, they ran over one of maple trees in front of the Church which so impeded their progress that a boy stopped them. Luckily nothing was broken, and Mr. Margeson upon arriving found his team awaiting him.

☞ Rev. T. S. Hill has been granted a vacation of two months by the Baptist Society, which time he intends to spend on the sea-board for the benefit of his health. Mr. Hill has been in delicate health for some time and the society acted a wise and generous part in giving him a short respite from his professional cares and duties.

☞ Mr. Noah Tindall, who has recently sold his place in the village started yesterday, with his family for Missouri, where he intends to purchase him a permanent home. Mr. Tindall has been a resident of Tecumseh for many years and it is with sincere regrets that his many friends here witnessed his departure.

☞ The darkey, they say, was the cause of the war. Be that as it may—Charley Bidwell's Darkey "Lew" was the cause of a slight war between Tom Fish the proprietor of the Exchange and Bidwell aforesaid. The skirmish took place last Saturday at the Exchange.—Luckily no lives were lost nor any one seriously wounded. The particulars of the affair, our Reporter has not yet been able to ascertain.

☞ Richard Gillespie, a farmer residing two miles and a half north of this place, has presented us with a great curiosity, a single wheat stalk bearing two full grown heads of wheat. It is at our office, and it will well repay the curious a trip up stairs, to see it.

Manchester, Michigan.

We recently enjoyed an opportunity of visiting our neighboring village of Manchester, and were delighted with the general indications of prosperity, which presented themselves on every hand. With its superior water power, and being located in the midst of a very fertile and productive section of farming country, Manchester ought to grow rapidly; and become a place of considerable business importance.

We noticed several fine dwellings in process of erection, and were told of others not yet commenced which are to be put up before the close of the season. A fine brick block on Main St. about midway between the Hotel and the river, is now in progress. It will be the finest block in the village, three stories high, with front enough for two good stores. The upper story, is to be finished up for a public hall. This will be a great convenience to the citizens of Manchester, as they have never had any public hall for concerts lectures and public business meetings.

A good substantial bridge, is also in process of construction across the river, in the place of the old one which had been condemned as unsafe. And hereby hangs a tale. A few days since, a couple of Presbyterian Clergymen, one of whom resides less than a thousand miles from Tecumseh, were crossing over on a temporary foot bridge; when one of them by mistake, stepped upon a board lying loose upon the surface of the water. Of course it did not sustain his weight, and he went down in about fourteen feet of water. He came to the surface, but failed to grasp anything by which he could support himself, and consequently he sank to the bottom the second time. Fearing that his clerical brother might drown before his eyes, the other "domine" bravely plunged in to the rescue. But it is somewhat doubtful if it would have proved a rescue, had not some of the bystanders taken the matter in hand and dragged them both out on dry land.

The joke of this performance was rendered all the richer, by a little circumstance which transpired only a few moments previously. A laboring man, who on account of his profanity is known as the Elder," had accidentally fallen into the water where it only came up to his hips. Our presbyterian domines were standing on the bank and joked the "Elder" on his not being willing "to receive full immersion." Of course, the "full immersion" of the two presbyterians, which took place almost immediately after, was relished by all the spectators as a capital joke.

We understand that the baptist minister at Manchester, feels very much elated at this indication of progress in the presbyterian church on the subject of baptism. It is an unusual spectacle, to witness the baptism by immersion of two presbyterian Clergymen in one day.—No wonder the baptist minister feels elated.—We understand he is now endeavoring to persuade the Methodist and Universalist ministers in Manchester, to follow the example of their presbyterian brethren and be immersed! We did not learn, whether he is likely to succeed in this labor of love. When we ascertain the result of his efforts, we shall hasten to communicate it to our readers. In the mean time, we feel inclined to do what we conveniently can, to assist our baptist friend, in the prosecution of the missionary work he has taken in hand. And we cannot close this editorial, without expressing the sincere hope that he will have the pleasure of seeing the two other Clergymen of his village immersed.

A Surprise Party.

Six or seven years since, a man by the name of R—— purchased a flouring mill at Solesville, in the adjoining county of Washtenaw, and engaged quite extensively in the purchase of wheat and manufacture of flour. He brought no family with him, and claimed to be a single man. Fond of society, he soon became quite a ladies man, admired for his social qualities, and his money.

A few days since, after spending the whole day in the country purchasing wheat; he returned in the evening to the hotel where he boarded, and there found a surprise party for whose coming he was entirely unprepared, consisting of his Wife, and a Daughter about nine years of age, whom he had deserted in California, and who had arrived in town only that afternoon in search of the husband and father. He had received no itination of their coming—was not aware they had left California: he had no reason to suppose his wife had learned his whereabouts; consequently the meeting with the wife and daughter under these circumstances, was a genuine surprise.

What arrangements he will make for the future, we are not advised. But we understand they have no intention of living together again, her visit being designed to obtain from him the means of support for herself and child.

A Row.

Our usually quite villge witnessed quite a scene on Friday evening last. It appears that one Michael Hamill who resides in Franklin about five miles distant from the village came to town in the afternoon on business and being somewhat addicted to strong drink, he partook rather too freely; about dark he was found by Mr. James Merritt one of the proprietors of the "National" in front of his Hotel talking in a very loud and boisterous manner with Halsey Lewis, one of his neighbors. As Hamill was creating a disturbance directly in front of the Hall door where ladies were passing in and out continually, Mr. Merritt requested him politely to go away, which he refused to do, and as constable Niblic happened to be standing near by Mr. Merritt requested him to take Hamill off. But Hamill had no notion of leaving and upon refusing to go a second time the constable took him by the collar and led him by the Hotel a few rods, in front of Sanfords egg shop. Hamill then resisted the officer and struck at him several times, hitting him once or twice and raving and swearing in a terrible manner. The constable then sent for Hamills horse and wagon and put him in telling him to go home and behave himself. But he rolled himself out behind, and would not go home. Niblack then sent for some handcuffs, and his own horse and buggy and when they arrived he took Hamill in with him and started for Adrian. But they had gone no father than the Methodist Church when the prisoner who was a very strong man seized the lines and began backing the horse, which soon ran them into the ditch and upset the buggy. They very naturally rolled out and the buggy and horse went on over them. One of Hamills neighbors came along just in then with a lumber wagon and Hamill was placed in that to be taken home, but he had gone but a few rods before he struck the driver of the team in the face, and kicked him, bruising him considerably and again rolled out of the wagon.

The constable then procured assistance and took the prisoner to Adrian and lodged him in Jail over night. The next morning he was brought before justice Hewitt who, upon hearing the testimony in the case fined Hamill fifteen dollars and in default of payment thirty days in the county jail. The fine was paid and Hamill went home with a suit of clothes badly damaged and fifteen dollars short in pocket.—After becoming sober he acknowledged that he had been in the wrong and thought that his punishment was none too severe.

"LO NECS."—The following is a letter picked up upon the streets, which, upon examinaiion, appears to be a description of the latest style dress, &c.

THE CRIMINALITY OF BALDNESS.—An erroneous impression is generally prevalent that baldness, come when it will, is a dispensation of Providence, and hence not to be prevented or remedied. As well might one argue that cork legs or spectacles are immoral, because they partially remove the inconveniences resulting from accidents or disease. Baldness is unpleasant both to the unfortunate persons afflicted and also to beholders. Consequently any effort toward its prevention is a blessing to all. This BARRETT'S VEGETABLE HAIR RESTORATIVE will do, as the testimony of the most scientific analytic chemists in the country shows. It restores gray hair, prevents hair failling out, changes the roots to their original organic action, eradicates dandruff and humors, keeps the scalcp healthy, contains no injurious ingredients, and is universally accorded to be a splendid dressing and superior toile article. Its merits are inside the bottle.

The proprietors guarantee to refund the money provided any persons will follow directions, and then certify that the Restorative has failed to do all that is claimed for it.—Pittsburg (Pa) Chronicle.

☞ Dog days days are fairly upon us and this is truly the sickly season.—Do not be without a supply of Coe's Dyspepsia Cure in the house. It cures cholera morbus, cramps, pains and cholic in either stomach or bowels, is the only remedy ever discovered that is sure cure for dyspepsia, and is a splendid antidote for disorders occasioned by a change of water or diet; being prompt, harmless and certain in its action, we cheerfully commend it to all classes.

☞ Rev. H L. Hayward will please accept our thanks for a fine lot of ripe tomatoes, the first of the season that we have had the pleasure of enjoying. They were quite a treat.

☞ President Johnson is to visit Detroit on the 4th of August.

LABOR.

BY W. A. TAYLOR.

Warm-hearted labor in the fields
Is nobler than the courts of state,
For she, at least, with truth can say,
That all her ends are good and great.
She moves, a princess full of smiles,
With ripened plenty in her arms,
And casts about her gifts, and sees
The hillsides full of golden charms.

She comes by belts of ripened corn,
And vines that bend with purple wealth,
By orchards dropping crimson fruits,
Blowing the golden airs of health.
She wears a fourfold crown, begirt
With the four seasons, flashing bright
On all her children as they come,
Gathering around her with delight

She goes by streams and dusty mills,
By meadows full of purple bloom;
All perfect in her godliness,
With blessings for the humblest home.
She walks on solid ground, and bares
Her brow to feel the breath of morn,
And hears the bugle breezes blow
Among the emerald-bladed corn.

She dots the sea with stately ships,
And looks across the world to see
Her harvests grow, and reapers reap
The golden grain in harmony.
She moves, and all her steps are flush
With starry flowers and healing balm,
She looks on pass on, and the storm
Is hushed, and all is pure and calm.

Yankee Inquisitiveness.

A newspaper correspondent tells the following good story:

I have just come across an anecdote of a notable man in this place, which I think will look well in print, and deserves to go "the rounds" of the press. Hon. Duncan C. Pell, who was Lieutenant-Governor of this State, last year, was a man of considerable eccentricity of character—a whole-souled, good-hearted individual, but decidedly "odd" in many respects. Nothing so much disturbed his equanimity as for persons to exhibit a curious disposition and attempt to know more of his affairs than he chose to tell. Many years ago, Mr. Pell was about to erect a large fence around one of his lots in the city, and, in order to save himself from the daily interrogatories which he knew would be made by his neighbors and passers-by, he had a signed painted, on which he displayed all the information in regard to the fence which he fancied could possibly be desired or demanded. He narrated concisely the following facts: Who was the owner of the land; why he fenced it in; how much lumber the fence was to contain; where he bought it, and how much a foot he paid for it; the quantity of nails to be used; the name of the builder, and the exact amount of land to be inclosed. Self-satisfied that he had answered all the questions that could be asked, Mr. Pell was quite happy at the idea that he had freed himself entirely from impertinent inquries. But one night, or rather very early on a disagreeable morning, Mr. Pell was awakened from a deep sleep by a loud knocking at his front door. The call appeared to be so urgent that Mr. Pell thrust his head out of the window and demanded, in no gentle tone,—

"What in the —— was the matter?"

Standing, shivering, in his only garment, Mr. Pell held the following colloquy with the intruder:

"Does Mr. Pell live here?"

"Yes. What do you want?"

"Mr. Duncan C. Pell?"

"Yes; Duncan C. Pell."

"Is it Mr. Pell who is building the fence on Mary street?"

"Yes, yes, certainly. What of it?"

"Well, Mr. Duncan C. Pell, do you intend to paint that fence, or will you whitewash it?"

The answer and the window went down together, and Mr. Pell retired to bed, satisfied that there could be no escape from genuine Yankee inquisitiveness.

Curious Facts About Water.

The extent which water mingles with bodies apparently the most solid, is very wonderful. The glittering opal, which beauty wears as an ornament, is only flint and water. Of every 1,200 tons of earth which every landholder has in his estate, 400 are water. The snow-capped summits of Snowdon and Ben Nevis have many million tuns of water in a solidified form. In every plaster of Paris statue which an Italian carries through the streets for sale, there is one pound of water to every four pounds of chalk. The air we breathe contains five grains of water to each cubic foot of its bulk. The potatoes and turnips which are boiled for our dinner have, in their raw state, the one 75 per cent., and the other 90 per cent. water. If a man weighing ten stone were squeezed in a hydraulic press, seven and a half stone of water would run out, and only two and a half dry residue matter remain. A man is, chemically speaking, 45 pounds of carbon and nitrogen, diffused through five and a half pailsful of water. In plants we find water mingling no less wonderfully. A sunflower evaporates one a quarter pints of water a day, and a cabbage about the same quantity. A wheat plant exhales, in 172 days, about 100,000 grains of water. An acre of growing wheat, on this calculation, draws and passes out about ten tons of water per day. The sap of plants is the medium through which this mass of fluid is conveyed. It forms a delicate pump, up which the watery particles run with the rapidity of a swift stream. By the action of the sap, various properties may be communicated to the growing plant. Timber in France is, for instance, dyed by various colors being mixed with water, and sprinkled over the root of tree. Dahlias are also colored by a similar process.

John Bunyan.

It being known to some of his persecutors in London, that Bunyan was often out of prison, they sent an officer to talk with the jailor on the subject; and, in order to find him out he was to get there in the middle of the night. Bunyan was at home with his family, but so restless that he could not sleep; he therefore acquainted his wife that, though the jailor had given him liberty to stay till morning, yet, from his uneasiness he must immediately return. He did so, and the jailor blamed him for coming in at so unseasonable an hour. Early in the morning a messenger came, and interrogating the jailor said, "Are all the prisoners safe?" "Yes." "Is John Bunyan safe?" "Yes." "Let me see him." He was called, and appeared, and all was well. After the messenger was gone, the jailor, addressing Bunyan, said: "Well, you may go out again just when you like; you know when to return better than I can tell you."

JOSH BILLINGS ON HENS.—Josh Billings talks learnedly as follows:—The best time to set a hen, iz when the hen is reddy. I kant tell what the best breed iz, but the shanghigh iz the meanest. It costs as much tu bord one as it does a stage hoss, and you might as well try to fatt a fannin-mill bi runnin oats thru it. There aint no profit in keeping a hen for hiz eggs if he lies less than one day. Hens iz very long lived if they don't contrakt the throat disease, there iz a great meany goes to pot every year by this melancholy disease. I kant tell exactly how to pick out a good hen; but, as a general thing, the long-eared ones I kno, are the least apt to skratch up a garden. Eggs packed in ekal parts ov salt and lime water, will keep from 20 to 80 years if they are not disturbed. Fresh beef steak iz good for Kanz. I suppose 4 or 5 pounds a day iz all that a hen would need at first along. I shall be happy to advise you at any time on this hen question—and take it in eggs.

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK.

General Intelligence.

Maximilian is snubbed, regardless of the protectorate of Napoleon. President Johnson has issued a proclamation declaring the blockade of Matamoras, and other Mexican ports, null and void as regards the privileges of American citizens, and plainly intimating that its enforcement will not be permitted by the United States.

The cholera is diminishing in the eastern cities though it has by no means disappeared. But in the west it is increasing with great rapidity. In St. Louis and Cincinnati it is especially virulent, and is declared an epidemic in the former city. It has also appeared on steamboats sailing the Mississippi, and many fatal cases are reported.

The order of Gen. Grant commanding the generals of departments to send him copies of newspapers which printed matter opposed to the government, has been revoked. No official report of the negro outrage at Helena, Ark., has yet been received at Washington. Gen. Rosecrans has resigned his place as brigadier general in the regular army and will be succeeded by Gen. Sickles. Gen. Canby has been appointed commander of the department of Washington.

Foreign News.

The Empress of Mexico has arrived in France.

The Canadian parliament has given its final adhesion to the confederation scheme.

The small ship-rigged yacht "Red, White and Blue," which left New York a month ago, has arrived in England.

Our Canadian neighbors are uneasy, and have telegraphed, without regard to expense, for breech-loading rifles from England.

The Queen of the Sandwich Islands was formally received at the Presidential mansion on the 14th. The "king of the cannibal islands" may be looked for next.

Canada is excited over another Fenian scare, and is hastening troops to the border. A monster Fenian pic nic that is, or is not, to be held on Grand Island, in the Niagara river, is to be the occasion for assembling fifteen thousand armed Irishmen who mean business.

The cable over the Gulf of St. Lawrence now being completed, intelligence is daily received in all the Western cities from Europe at a much earlier hour than it is dated at London, Paris, or even St. Petersburgh. This of course is owing to the difference of time between the two countries.

The American officers dined at the Imperial Palace at St. Petersburg on the 15th, and every attention was paid to them. An investigation shows that the attempt upon the life of the Czar was intended to effect a general revolution in the empire, and was a part of the programme of the European Revolutionary Committee.

Mexican news is interesting, and foreshadows the early bursting of the bubble of Empire in Mexico. The French have been driven out of Monterey and Saltillo, and the whole of Northern Mexico has been abandoned by the Imperialists. The French garrison at Tampico had been driven out of the citadel, and that city is ere this in the hands of the Liberals. To add to the list of misfortunes, the Republicans had sunk a French iron-clad steamer in the channel.

Louis Napoleon gave the Prussian Embassador an audience on the 15th. The latter presented his King's reply to the demand for an extension of frontier, declaring that it is inadmissible and that Prussia will not consent. Napoleon replied that he had made the demand to satisfy public opinion in France. He deemed the demand a just one, but acknowledged the fairness of the Prussian view. He said that nothing should happen through him to disturb the peace between France and Prussia.

Dispatches over the cable, dated at Berlin, on the evening of the 15th, state that a Council of State is sitting in that city, considering the question of re-annexing the Southern German States to the confederation. The British Government, it is stated, has given its consent to the proposed Canadian confederation. It is also stated that the terms of a loan to the colonies for the completion of a colonial railroad from Halifax to the Grand Trunk Railroad have been settled. It is reported that Napoleon has abandoned the idea of annexing the German provinces on the Rhine. The Paris Moniteur denies that the supposed warlike purchases of the French Government show an intent of war.

Dispatches over the Atlantic cable, dated at London at noon on the 14th, state that Prussia has definitely refused to accede to the French demand for an extension of territory. The Prussian official journal calls it an absurd demand. Dispatches from Paris of the same date, quote the Moniteur as saying that Napoleon's actions have been with a single aim to the peace of France and of Europe. The officers of the American squadron at Cronstadt, made their official entry into St. Petersburg on Saturday last. Fifty thousand people turned out to witness the scene. In the evening a ball was given by the yacht club, and the city was brilliantly illuminated. Prussia has informed Austria that she will maintain Italy's right to Venetia. There is great excitement in Vienna, and 482 men are to be tried for treason. Crowds of people in the street hail the emperor with cries of "abdicate," "abdicate." The four weeks' armistice between Austria and Italy will continue longer unless notice is given by one party or the other, of its cessation. There is a probability of the renewal of the war between Prussia and Bavaria, on the soil of the latter.

The cholera seems to have reached its extreme point of fatality in Cincinnati, and is now on the decline. The number of deaths has fallen from 86 to 50. In St. Louis it is still on the increase, and on the 17th, there were 161 cases and 62 deaths.

It is seriously asserted by some of the most eminent and scientific men in the medical profession that the disease known as Asiatic cholera has not made its appearance this summer in any part of the United States. The deaths that have been reported in a number of cities as having occurred from cholera have been the result, if the opinion of those gentlemen is correct, of a malignant type of dysentery or "cholera morbus."

Mr. Breiman, an industrious German citzen of Carlinville, Ill., was slightly bitten upon the arm, by his dog, some eight weeks ago. Without describing their well known manifestations, we will only mention that the mad stone owned by Mr. Sam. Tribble, of Piasa, was sent for, and applied on Sunday morning, without producing any favorable effect. The man died in two or three hours after its application.

Seventy-five thousand tickets had been sold, when the managers suddenly reached the conclusion that it would pay best to leave, and they did it—since which nothing has been discovered.

Henry C. Bowen, publisher of the New York Independent which has been especially severe upon the President and his policy, has been removed from the Brooklyn collectorship.

The New York Aldermen's circle is excited just now over the hapless fate of one of their ilk, who, on his way up town in that city one day last week, with $24,000 in his wallet, wherewith to buy a certain house, was met by a well known faro bank dealer, who invited him into a saloon to play a game of draw poker, and suggested that he might as well have money enough to buy two houses as one, while about it. In the course of an hour or two the poor Alderman had lost every dollar of his $24,000, and so didn't have money enough to buy any house at all.

The national union convention commenced its session on the 14th, in the wigwam which was at last made ready for the reception of the delegates. At half past twelve o'clock the convention was called to order by the Hon. A. W. Randall, postmaster general, who announced that the delegates from South Carolina and Massachusetts would enter the convention arm in arm. The announcement was greeted with loud cheers. Mr. Randall then came forward and nominated the Hon. John A. Dix as temporary chairman of the convention. Gen. Dix, on taking the chair, made a brief but eloquent speech in which he lamented the fact that the union was not yet restored and announced that the design of the convention was to do all in its power to effect that object. The convention then adjourned till next day. Mr. Vallandigham, after resisting till the morning of the meeting all appeals to withdraw, at last gave way and consented to resign his seat as a delegate. George Francis Train had done the same in a characteristic manifesto.

On the 15th a permanent organization was effected, with Senator Doolittle as Chairman, and one Vice President and Secretary from each State. A committee was appointed to frame an address to the people of the country, and prepare a series of resolutions, with Senator Conway, of Pennsylvania, as Chairman. Mr. Vallandigham's letter, resigning his seat as a delegate was then read, and his resignation accepted. A dispatch was received from President Johnson congratulating the Convention on its success, and a resolution offered recommending a revision of the neutrality laws. A full report will be found in this paper.

Marriage in Egypt.

When an Egyptian wants a wife he is not allowed to visit the harems of his friends to select one, for Mohammed forbade men to see the face of any woman they could marry; that is to say, any beside their mothers or sisters. A man is, therefore, obliged to employ a khatbeh, or matchmaker, to find one for him, for which service of course she expects "backsheesh," that is, payment. The knatbeh, having found a girl, recommends her to the man as exceedingly beautiful and eminently suitable to him. The father is then waited upon to ascertain the dowry he requires; for all wives are purchased, as they were in patriarchal days. When Jacob had no money to pay for Rachel he served her father seven years as an equivalent; and, when duped, was obliged to serve a second time to secure his prize. [Gen. xxix.] Fathers still refuse to part with a younger daughter in marriage before an elder shall have been married. The people of Armenia, in Asiastic Turkey, forbid a younger son to marry before an elder, and this is likewise the law of the Hindoos.

The price of a wife varies from five shillings to fifteen hundred dollars. The girl may not be more than five or six years old, but whatever her age, two thirds of the dowry is at once paid to the father, in the presence of witnesses. The father then, or his representative, says, "I betroth to thee my daughter," and the young man responds, "I accept such betrothal." Unless among the lower classes, the father expends the dowry in the purchase of dress, ornaments, or furniture for the bride, which never become the property of her husband. Even when betrothed, the intercourse of the parties is very restricted. The Arabs will not allow them to see each other; but the Jews are not quite so stringent. The betrothals often continue for years before the man demands his wife, thus: "Samson went down and talked to the woman," or espoused her, and, "after a time, he returned to take her."

Girls are demanded at the age of ten, and between that and sixteen years; but, after sixteen, few men will seek them, and the dowry expected is then proportionately small.

Girls in Egypt are often mothers at 13 and grandmothers at 26; and, in Persia, they are said to be mothers at 11, grandmothers at 22, and past childbearing at 30. When a man demands his betrothed, a day is fixed for the nuptials, and for seven nights before he is expected to give a feast, which, however, is furnished by the guests themselves. This one sends coffee, another rice, another sugar, &c.

The principal time of this continued feast is the night before the consummation. The conduct is intrusted to the "friend of the bridegroom." [John iii, 29.] About the middle of this day the bride arrives at the house, and retires to the harem, where she is with her mother, sisters, and female friends. At the third or fourth watch of the night—three or four hours after sunset—the bridegroom, who has not yet seen his fair one, goes to the mosque to pray, accompanied by "meshals," or torches and lanterns, with music. Upon his return he is introduced to the bride, with whom, having given her attendant a present to retire, he is left alone. He then throws off her veil, and for the first time sees her face. If satisfied, he informs the women outside, who immediately express their joy, by screaming "Zuggareet," which is echoed by the women in the house, and then by those in the neighborhood.

A Hundred Hours Awake and Walking.

The Portsmouth (N. H.) Journal says that John Seaver of that place, for a wager of $500, commenced on Tuesday walking 100 miles in as many consecutive hours. How he was affected is thus related:

"On Wednesday afternoon, at the close of the first 24 hours, he seemed weary and felt a stronger disposition to sleep than he afterwards experienced. This was driven off, but the effort produced a severe headache, which continued during the remaining days. On Thursday he felt drowsy, but was so excited that he would sit down without napping. Every hour the circuiting of the room 42 times was regularly performed, in times ranging from 20 to 30 minutes. On that morning he began to be discouraged, and expressed a wish to abandon further effort. His advisers persuaded him, and he renewed his efforts, and, as he expressed it, with a demined will to succeed.

"Friday, the third day, he was more wakeful, his nervous excitement having increased—probably by the strong tea, which was his only beverage. His head was bandaged and bathed in rum and alum frequently. He stumbled from weakness and weariness, but got up without help. Saturday the fourth and last day, was one of weariness, aching limbs, aching head and prostration. He required to be supported as he went his hourly rounds. In the ninety-fifth hour he fainted and fell. Every hour of the last four he was bathed all over with rum and alum. In the ninety-ninth hour he again fell in faintness. The last hour at length arrived, and with his assistants he completed his 42 circuits in 33 minutes. He now received fresh energy from the idea that he had accomplished his feat, and, unaided, he literally dragged his limbs once more around the hall, to show that he was still awake, and, amid the cheers of a large audience, he retired after nine o'clock.

"He did not recover from the sickness that ensued for several days."

He had doubtless found a difficulty in picking up guineas before.

THE PHILADELPHIA CONVENTION.

As the transactions of the last day embody all the proceedings of public interest, we give below the report of the associated press in full:

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 16.—The National Union convention reassembled in the Wigwam at 10 o'clock this morning, pursuant to the adjournment. Every seat in the building was filled. The attendance of ladies was greater than on any previous day. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed.

The proceedings were opened with prayer by Rev. Reine M. Snyder, of Pennsylvania.

The President of the convention, Senator Doolittle, then rose and said: "Before we proceed to any further business, the Chair begs leave to announce, as the first response to the call for this convention, the result of the Colorado election." [Cheers.]

"DENVER, C. T., Aug. 16, 1866.

"Returns from all parts of the Territory render certain the election of A. C. Hunt, the Administration candidate for delegate to Congress, over Chilcott, the radical."

The dispatch was greeted with great applause.

Mr. Crowell, of New Jersey offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a National Union Executive Committee be appointed, to be composed of two delegates from each State and Territory and the District of Columbia.

The resolution was adopted.

Hon. Reverdy Johnson, who on on rising was greeted with enthusiastic cheers, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two delegates from each State, and one from each Territory and the District of Columbia, be appointed by the chair to wait upon the President of the United States, and present him with an authenticated copy of the proceedings of this convention.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Mr. Charles Knapp of the District of Columbia offered the following resolution.

Resolved, That a Committee of Finance be appointed to consist of two delegates from each State and Territory and the District of Columbia.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Cowan arose and said: "On behalf of the committee who were appointed to prepare resolutions and address, I have to state that after a very careful and elaborate consideration of the same, lasting all day and a part of the night, we have agreed upon the same. I beg leave to report on the following declarations of principles, adopted unanimously by the committee, which the Secretary of this convention will read, also an address to the people of the country, which will be read by the Hon. Mr. Raymond of New York." [Applause.]

The Secretary then proceeded to read the declaration of principles, each clause of which was loudly applauded. The last one, which endorses the President, was greeted with prolonged cheering, and in which the audience and delegates united.

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES.

The National Union Convention, now assembled in the city of Philadelphia, composed of delegates from every State and Territory in the Union, admonished by the solemn lessons which for the last five years it has pleased the Supreme Ruler of the Universe to give to the American people, profoundly grateful for the return of peace, desirous, as a large majority of their countrymen, in all sincerity, to forget and forgive the past, revering the Constitution as it came to us from our ancestors, regarding the Union in its restoration as more sacred than ever, looking with deep anxiety into the future as of instant and continuing trial, hereby issue and proclaim the following declarations of principles and purposes on which they have with perfect unanimity agreed:

First—We hail, with gratitude to Almighty God, the end of war and the return of peace to an afflicted and beloved land.

Second—The war just closed has maintained the authority of the Constitution, with all the powers which it confers, and all the restrictions which it imposes upon the general government; and it has preserved the Union, with the equal rights, dignity, and authority of the States perfect and unimpaired.

Third—Representation in the Congress of the United States and in the Electoral College is a right recognized in the Constitution as abiding in every State, and as a duty imposed upon its people, fundamental in its nature, and essential to the exercise of our republican institutions; and neither Congress nor the General Government has any authority or power to deny this right to any, or withhold its enjoyment under the Constitution from the people thereof.

Fourth—We call upon the people of the United States to elect to Congress, as members thereof, none but men who admit this fundamental right of representation, and who will receive to seats their loyal representatives from every State in allegiance to the United States, subject to the constitutional right of each house to judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own members.

Fifth—The Constitution of the United States, and the laws made in pursuance thereof, are the supreme law of the land, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary nothwithstanding; all the powers not conferred by the Constitution upon the General Government, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved States or the people thereof, and among the rights thus reserved to the States is the right to prescribe qualifications for the elective franchise there, which right Congress cannot interfere with. No State or convention of States has the right to withdraw from the Union, or to exclude, through their action in Congress, or otherwise, any State or States from the Union. The Union of these States is perpetual.

Sixth—Such amendments to the Constitution of the United States may be made by the people thereof, as may be deemed expedient, but only in the mode pointed out by its resolution; and proposing such amendments, whether by Congress or a convention, and in ratifying the same, all the States have an equal and indefeasible right to a voice and vote therein.

Seventh—Slavery is abolished and forever prohibited, and there is neither desire nor purpose on the part of the Southern States that it should ever be re-established on the soil or within the jurisdiction of the United States, and the enfranchised slaves in all the States of the Union should receive, in connection with all their inhabitants, equal protection in every right of person and property.

Eighth—While we regard as utterly invalid, and never to be assumed or made of binding force, any obligation incurred or undertaken in making war against the United States, we hold the debt of the nation to be sacred and inviolable, and we proclaim our purpose in discharging this, as in performing all other national obligations, to maintain unimpaired and unimpeached the honor and faith of the Republic.

Ninth—It is the duty of the Federal Government to recognize the services of the Federal soldiers and sailors in the contest just closed, by meeting promptly and fully all their just and rightful claims for the services they have rendered the nation, and by extending to those of them who have survived, and to the widows and orphans of those who have fallen, the most generous and considerate care.

Tenth—In Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, who in his great office has proved steadfast in his devotion to the Constitution and the laws, and the interests of country, unmoved by persecution and undeserved reproach, having faith immeasurable in the people and in the principles of the Government, we recognize a Chief Magistrate worthy of the nation and equal to the great crisis upon which his lot is cast; and we tender to him, in the discharge of his high and responsible duties, our profound respect and assurance of our cordial and sincere support.

After the vote had been taken on the adoption of the foregoing declaration of principles, it was found that the reading of the seventh one had been omitted by accident, and this fact was announced by Senator Doolittle. It was then read and adopted with great applause and unanimity.

The declaration of principles was then adopted as a whole, with enthusiastic cheers.

After the adoption, three cheers were called for, and given in the most enthusiastic manner, for Senator Cowan of Pennsylvania.

Senator Cowan acknowledged the compliment, but said that as he considered himself the host of the convention, one of his distinguished guests would address it by virtue of authority unanimously derived from the committee on resolutions and addresses, namely, the Hon. H. J. Raymond.

Mr. Raymond therefore proceeded to read the address, which had been written by himself, as had also been the declaration of principles. He was so frequently interrupted by applause that the Chairman appealed to the convention to restrain such manifestations until the reading should be concluded. Nevertheless, at the close of one sentence, declaring that no people subjected to such treatment as that to which the South was now subjected could long remain loyal, cheer after cheer resounded through the wigwam.

Senator Johnson asked that the sentence be repeated. The sentence was read again, as follows: "No people has ever yet existed whose loyalty and faith such treatment, long continued, would not alienate and impair; and the ten millions of Americans who live in the South would be unworthy citizens of a free country, degenerate sons of a heroic ancestry, unfit even to become the guardians of the rights and liberties bequeathed to them by the fathers and founders of the Republic, if they could accept, with uncomplaining submissiveness, the humiliation thus sought to be imposed upon them."

The sentiment was again cheered with the greatest enthusiasm, and at the close of the reading of the address, ex-Governor Perry of South Carolina rose and moved its adoption.

The motion was declared to be carried unanimously amid prolonged cheering.

Mr. Samuel J. Tilden of New York then rose and proposed, on behalf of the New York delegation, three cheers for Hon. Henry J. Raymond, who had prepared the address just read.

Mr. Patten, on behalf of the Pennsylvania delegation, seconded the call. The cheers were then enthusiastically given.

The address contains about 8,000 words, and will make not far from four solid columns in the New York morning papers. It demands the universal acknowledgment of the legitimate consequences of the war, which are the perpetual maintenance of the Union and the destruction of slavery. It asserts next that the Government acquired no new rights or powers by the war; that it acted only on the defensive. Congress had passed a resolution that when the war closed all the powers and dignity of the States should remain unimpaired and intact. The power assumed by the Government in the States, since the war closed, was in violation of the Constitution. The Constitution declares that no State shall, without its own consent, be deprived of its equal representation in the Senate. The action of Congress denying representation to the Southern States appears as great an effort to overthrow the Government as was that of armed rebellion. If one Congress can exclude on one pretext, another Congress may exclude other States on another. There is no warrant for this in the Constitution. Not only cannot Representatives be excluded from Congress, but no State, without its own consent, can be deprived of equal representation in the Senate, even by an amendment to the Constitution. The only pretext for the action of Congress is, that the States lately in rebellion have lost their right to representation which the supreme Government only can restore. But it is a principle that no right can be forfeited, nor can the right or duty of a State to be represented in Congress be impaired by rebellion; only its enjoyment of that privilege can be obstructed.

The address further asserts that the position of Congress in the matter is not compatible with the public safety. It is also argued that three fourths of the loyal States cannot change the fundamental law affecting the others, and that we have no right to pass judgment upon the motives of any citizen of the United States when his acts are loyal. Nowhere are the laws now obeyed better than in the States lately in rebellion. The disturbances that have occurred were due as much to injudicious political movements as to any purpose hostile to the Government. If the people of the South show less disposition than formerly to acquiesce in the new order of affairs, it is because Congress has withheld their rights from them. If they felt otherwise they would be degenerate sons of their sires. No people ever existed whose loyalty would not have been impaired by such treatment. The people of the South would not be worthy to be trusted in the exercise of their rights if they were willing to submit to such humiliation. These men acted as they did either from a conviction of right or because they were under compulsion. For this they have suffered tenfold more than those who have remained in allegiance.

The address pledges them to future obedience to the laws. It adds that the war has swept away slavery, the cause of sectional variance and hostilities, and has revealed and disciplined our powers.

The address directs attention to the fact that a new Congress is soon to be elected, and adds if the present policy be pursued civil war may be renewed; and calls upon every Congressional District to return only members who are favorable to the policy of restoration.

The several committees appointed by the Chair were then announced as follows:

President of Executive Committee at Washington, Chas. Knapp of New Jersey.

Chas. Knapp of the District of Columbia was appointed Chairman of the Committee on Finance.

The usual vote of thanks to the officers, the press, and the city authorities were then passed unanimously.

WIGWAM, August 15, 1866.

J. S. Tilden, Esq., Chairman of the New York Delegation:

DEAR SIR: I am obliged to return to New York this afternoon, on urgent business. The admirable spirit of harmony and conciliation which pervades the Convention renders my presence unnecessary, and leaves me no other regret than that of being unable to witness the close of proceedings so auspiciously commenced and so full of promise of future good.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. DIX.

The letter was greeted with loud cheers.

The President of the Convention, Senator Doolittle, then said:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION—For the kindness and courtesy by which you have sustained the Chair, in the efforts to which by your resolution you have been pleased to allude, I return you my sincere thanks.

Before putting the motion which shall terminate the proceedings of this Convention, I shall ask you once more to join in prayer with the Rev. Mr. Elliott, invoking the benediction of Almighty God, by whose support we are sure of success, but without which we should inevitably fail.

Rev. Mr. Elliott thereupon made an eloquent prayer, returning thanks to the Almighty for the harmony and union of hearts which had been manifested throughout the Convention; for the spirit of conciliation, good will, and charity seen in all its members and proceedings; for blessings which now crown the nation, especially for the President of the United States, so worthy of his situation and position.

The Chairman, at half past twelve o'clock, put the question and announced that the Convention stood adjourned sine die.

The band then played very touchingly and beautifully the air of "Home, Sweet Home." Tremendous cheers were given for President Johnson and Senator Doolittle; and after much kindly and pleasant conversation the members of the Convention and the spectators gradually dispersed.

Corn—What Illinois Can Do.

A New England Johnny cake—taking the old fashioned dimensions—is 16 inches long, 6 inches wide, and 1½ inches in thickness. Supposing the entire crop of Illinois for 1865 was ground into meal and converted into Johnny cake, allowing one quart of meal to each cake, and the Johnny cakes were laid up in the form of a solid wall, 20 feet high and 20 feet wide, so that three carriages could go abreast thereon, this wall would reach from Cairo to Dunleith. It would surround the city of London, covering 110 square miles, with a wall 60 feet high and 60 feet wide of solid bread. This immense crop would put a Johnny cake in the hands of every man, woman and child—savage and civilized—upon the face of the habitable globe. It would feed the planet for two days. It would require a crib eight feet high by eight feet wide, allowing two and a half feet to a bushel, 8,278 miles in length, reaching from Passamaquoddy bay to San Francisco, and a good share of the distance back. If it were converted into whisky, computing three gallons to the bushel, it would form an inland sea sufficient to float the entire navies of the world. No man need starve to death in Illinois.

If all the kernels of this extraordinary crop were strung on a wire, allowing two and a half grains to an inch, lengthwise, there being 67,200 in a bushel, this wire would reach to the moon 250 times, forming a cable four inches in diameter.

Now, if this gigantic cable could be twisted about the necks of speculators, parasites, monopolists, middle men, and all others who swindle the honest farmer and producer, and the two ends fastened, one to the earth and the other to her attending satellite, and these planets commence revolving in different directions, the future avails of corn crops be most likely to find their way into the pockets of those who honestly earn them.—Rockford Register.

A FROG STORY.—One is even half inclined to accept as indubitable what Elian tells us of the water snakes and the frogs of Egypt. The former have, he informs us, a passionate liking for frogs—that is, for devouring and digesting them. No one knows this better than the frog, and, accordingly, when they meet in a pond, wonderful is the cunning that ensues. The water snake glides up as if intentionless of evil, but our other slimy friend is quite aware of the designs of the passionless looking snake. He makes for the nearest twig, seizes it, and carries it across his mouth, and then fearlessly approaches the hydra. The latter now makes at the frog with open jaws, but the twig across the frog's mouth is much wider than the jaws of the snake, and he can by no possibility swallow the much desired frog. The latter looks down his enemy's throat from the outside, holds fast to the protecting twig, and laughs. The water snakes tries again and again; he glides around his anticipated victim, but the frog always contrives to keep him in view, and the end of every attempt is that the foiled snake finds the bar carried by his anticipatory victim lying across his open jaws, and the frog once —Alexander T. Stewart's (of New York) income is larger than the annual salaries combined of the President of the United States, the Governors of all the States, Senators, and Congressmen, State officers, and members of the Legislatures of the different States. Out of such an income, Mr. Stewart could pay the entire expenses of several State governments as easily as many men now support their own families.

—The Oswego (N. Y.) Times reports the brutal whipping of a lad about twelve years of age by his father, a man named Euphrates Lake, of that city. Lake is a Seventh-day Baptist, and whipped his son in a shocking manner because he did not want to work on Sunday, when told to do so by his father. It is said that a short time ago the same man turned out of doors his daughter, fifteen years old, because she would not work on Sunday.

—A most remarkable temperance lecture was delivered in New York recently by Dr. Crane, at the meeting of the Board of Health. The lecture was as follows: "In the Stygian and pest ridden Twelfth Ward of Brooklyn, not a solitary one of the 500 members of the Father Matthew Society, resident therein, has been attacked by the cholera." Mr. Acton clinched this remark by adding that not a cholera case had yet occurred among the 16,000 members of the Father Matthew society in New York.

—The New York Nation takes the very sensible ground that we need a general marriage law, applicable to the whole country, as much and more than we need a general bankrupt law. "All American men and women," it says, "ought to be married, and all American children to be born under the same law. It may be added that so lax are the laws of divorce in some of the States, that the Reverend Dr. Hovey, of Newton, has lately published a little volume in which the Christian law of divorce is made obligatory on all Christians, any in the laws of the States to the contrary notwithstanding. By this rule crime or death can alone dissolve the marriage relation."

—"Amelia," Brigham Young's latest wife, is a model woman for the "Saints." She is notional, imperious and coquetish, and Young pets her like a child. One evening a friend took tea with her and the Mormon prophet. After tea they remained at the table eating nuts, and Amelia threw her shells through an open window on the opposite side of the room. Her husband said, "Amelia, don't do that; put your shells by your plate." "I shan't do it," replied the fair one; "I'll throw them where I please, and I'll do as I please, and you may help yourself." And pulling her guest by the dress, she said, "Come, let's go up stairs and let him grunt it out."

—The Vice-President of the New York Prison Association relates the story of a woman, who having been drugged and ruined by a false lover, made stealthy revenge the purpose of her life. With money coaxed from him she hired sharpers to lead him to the gambling table and the saloon, and after he had run through his property and became a broken down drunkard, she hung around him to taunt him with her ruin. After his death she made thirty-one other young men the victims of her vengeance on the sex. The gentleman who narrates this adds as a warning to young men that, among creatures of her class no game is followed with greater relish than that of involving all who come within their toils in crime and its consequent punishment.

—A young lady at East Windsor, Mass, was pretty considerably scared the other day. She was brushing the dust from the hearth of the cooking stove, in which was a full fire, when suddenly a live and particularly lively snake suddenly issued from a hole in the stove door, full into her face. A succession of screams brought the feminine portion of the household to the kitchen, and the mother dispatched the "sarpint," which was charging about the room and writhing with pain. It seems that a basket of chips had been scraped up the previous evening, and a moment before the "scare," the mother had emptied a portion of them into the stove, and with them went the snake.

—An apparatus called a "kerosene telegraph" has been invented in Boston. It consists of two small boxes, arranged with levers for opening and closing apertures, of an inch and a half in diameter. An ordinary kerosene lamp was placed in each box with a reflector behind it. One of these machines was taken by Mr. Cyrus A. George (also connected with the office) to a point in East Cambridge, a mile and a half distant from the City Hall, and at 8½ o'clock (the time previously agreed upon) his signals were received by his brother, who was stationed in the fire-alarm office in the cupola of the city hall. He answered them, and they continued to converse with great ease and rapidity for an hour or more, sending and receiving messages. They found no difficulty in reading as accurately and nearly as fast as by the ordinary means of telegraphing. With this apparatus the operator believes he could operate, easily, five miles in clear weather, and by increasing the power of the light 10 or 15 miles.

—The London Times, in article, on the superiority of the American guns, both large and small, over the English, says: "The most defective breech-loader known to the Americans is an immeasurably more serviceable arm than the needle-gun which has started the war department into a spasm of activity, while some of the best of their rifles have scarcely been seen in this country. It is exactly the same with their navy; while we are hesitating and delaying, the Americans are working and finishing."

MANY sensitive house-wives will be relieved to learn that F. W. Putman, a naturalist, and a member of the Essex institute, of Salem, in a recent speech at a meeting of the institute said that the presence of bed-bugs must not be considered an evidence of a want of cleanliness or of neglect of active efforts to prevent or expel them. They breed as a sort of parasite on rabbits, pigeons, bats, and other animals, and it has often been found necessary to exterminate those animals from some places before the bed-bug nuisance could be abated.

—It has lately been discovered that the whole of the sulphur used at present in illuminating gas (and which makes the gas so offensive) may be removed by bringing it it in contact with the ammonical liquor which is an almost worthless product of the same gas-works.

—The inhabitants of Baku, on the Caspian sea, have recently utilized the emanations of carburetted hydrogen gas which rise from the waters, for lighting purposes. The gas is collected by means of large funnel mouthed tubes, which are attached to floating rafts and dip some feet into the water.

—The Cooper Union for the advancement of science and art, has just celebrated the expiration of its seventh academic year. The number of pupils that have been under instruction for the past year exceeds two thousand, of whom less than one hundred have paid tuition fees, the residue being benificiaries. In the female art department the increase over any previous year was 206. There are three classes of pupils, arranged according to the object of their studies: Amateurs, free pupils preparing to become teachers, and the industrial class, composed of those who desire to make art a profession.

—Among the latest and most valuable contribution of science to art is the new substance called parkaine. It is the discovery of Alexander Parke, of Birmingham, England, and in its basis bears some affinity to gun-cotton, being explosive to a high degree. The inventor, however, has brought this quality under control, and the plastic character of the material is such as to render it invaluable for the production of fac-similes of ancient gems, cameos, and such like objects of art. It is also applicable, to a valuable extent, to certain processes connect with photographic art.

—A scientific way of lighting pipes and cigars has been recently introduced in Paris under the name of poudre de fue. It consists of pyrophorus, which is preserved in a small tin case with a narrow orifice When a little of this black powder is poured out on the end of a cigar, or on the tobacco in a pipe stem, and then gently breathed upon, it become incandescent, and is in a condition to light said pipe or cigar. What next? Why there are little tubes sold containing pellets of potassium, and they are recommended to the juvenile Parisians as a means of forming splendid Gregorian fireworks, on any convenient piece of water!

—A Buffalo letter describes an invention for the preservation of dead bodies, in case of deferred funerals, and for shipping corpses a long distance. It is in the shape of a coffin or burial case; is made of paraffine cloth, in duplicated walls, the alternate chambers being filled with cotton, feathers, etc. The outside is composed of patent leather. On the lid is fixed a square box, in which ice is placed, and which has connecting pipes with the chambers, etc., the whole constituting a perfect and powerful refrigerator. It has been discovered by scientific experiments that decomposition of animal matter cannot take place at a temperature of 45 degrees; and this refrigerator is capable of producing a temperature as low as 28 degrees wih a very small quantity of ice and salt. For ordinary poses it is not necessary to use anything but ice to preserve the body. Bodies can be shipped in warm weather in this case, a distance of one thousand miles without replenishing ice.

The Jewelry Trade of Chicago.

The unexampled progress of this city from an insignificant border town to a first class rank among the cities of the world; its unequaled prosperity within the past few years; the vast strides it has made in material growth and aggrandizement—furnish ample themes for astonishment and self gratulation. Chicago to-day rejoices in being the greatest railroad centre, the heaviest packer and exporter of pork and beef on the continent, and the largest grain entrepot in the world. Our leading merchants no longer depend on Eastern jobbing houses for their supplies. They import goods direct from the manufactories of the old world, thus making Chicago the great distributing centre of merchandise without intermediate transfer or handling, to all points in the Northwest. In commerce, in manufactures, in trade, in everything that conduces to the permanent wealth and stability of a metropolis whose "star of empire" has not yet begun to approximate the zenith of its glory—Chicago is without a parallel in the history of powerful and influential cities.

With this remarkable and steady influx of prosperity and wealth, have come also the refinements, the luxuries and tastes of elegant and enlightened society. We have an Opera House which for architectural beauty, and interior convenience of arrangement and appropriate ornamentation excels anything elsewhere of the kind in America. We have an excellent gallery of art, and afford every facility for its encouragement in our midst. Our operatic, musical and theatrical entertainments are of the best that well directed enterprise can procure or first class talent supply. In none of these essential concomitants of civilization and progress, are we one whit behind older and wealthier cities.

But nothing perhaps furnishes more convincing evidence of æsthetic culture, and that love of the beautiful (which is innate in every human heart, and takes root and thrives in a plethora of worldly prosperity,) than the rapidly increasing demand for articles of personal adornment and use. Though fashions are capricious, our ladies are always fully up to the times in their style of dress, and so too, are our gentlemen in the cut and make up of their apparel. In matters of ornament and luxury, our tastes are no less expensive and exacting. From a cursory examination of the books or the Assessor of Internal Revenue, we find that the aggregate sales for the year past, of nine of our principal houses engaged in the jewelry trade, reached a total of $1,351,121.50 This is an increase of $700,000 on the returns made the year previous. We include sales only of houses engaged in a legitimate business and not auction and other sales of jewelry which would doubtless swell this statement to a much larger figure.

Of this revenue, by far the largest proportion was taken by Matson & Hoes, No. 117 Lake street, the oldest firm, and heaviest capitalists and importers of this class of goods in the West. Their sales amounted to $337,885.00. Deduct this from the gross sales, and divide the remainder among the other eight houses, and the average sales of each would be within a fraction of $168,890. Some of them sold more, while others sold a good deal less than this amount.

The ready and logical inference of these figures is the fact, that there is a growing taste for personal ornament and luxury in the West, which keeps pace with its advance in all the more substantial elements of prosperity and wealth; and furthermore that Messrs. Matson & Hoes with their great facilities and business connections with the best manufactories in this and the old world, are well able to maintain the lead in all branches of the wholesale and retail jewelry trade which they have held in this city for so many years past.

Their preparations for the ensuing season have been commensurate with the increased demand for all such articles as their heavy capital and unlimited credit can supply. Their establishment has been replenished with an immense stock of the most costly fabrics that the mineral world and the best mechanical skill can produce. Consignments of the latest novelties of solid or plated silverware, gold and silver watches, diamonds and other precious stones, bronzes, paintings, miscellaneous jewelry, &c., are daily received and sold by this firm. While curious visitors to this establishment from city or country are shown every attention and courtesy and are always welcome, the buyer will find everything he purchases will prove just as represented. We would urge our readers who require any article of jewelry, and who can appreciate the advantage of purchasing from an unlimited stock of the choicest description and variety of goods—to call on Matson & Hoes, No. 117 Lake street, for they offer the most liberal inducements and warrant everything they sell. They never fail, in short, to give customers the satisfaction of knowing and feeling that their money has been profitably and judiciously spent.—Western Railroad Gazette.

CHAMBERLAIN'S IMMEDIATE RELIEF—A Tonic and Pain Killer, is the most valuable and cheapest family medicine in the world, will certainly cure, and if used in time will prevent, the following diseases, as can be proved by nearly one thousand letters from persons who have used the medicine: Cholera Morbus, Asiatic Cholera, Cramps, Colic, Coughs, Croup, Catarrh, Congestion, Colds, Cuts, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Diptheria, Fever, Rheumatism, Fever and Ague, Neuralgia, Inflammation, Spasms, Sprains, Toothache, Earache, Headache, Backache, in short, wherever pain or soreness exists, either internal or external, there apply the medicine, and the patient will receive immediate relief.

It is the best! In 1849 and in 1854 this medicine cured many thousands seized with cholera, and its timely use as a preventative saved millions of lives.

It is the cheapest! One thirty-five cent bottle of this medicine will cure more complaints than one hundred dollars spent in employing doctors. The thirty-five cent bottle is as large as a fifty cent bottle of any other medicine.

It is warranted! One bottle of this medicine can be had of my agents, and the privilege given the purchaser of using one-half the contents on trial, and if it does not prove satisfactory the money will be refunded.

No family should be without it!

Dealers may tell you they have something else as good, but do not be deceived—ask for Chamberlain's Relief and take no other.

From a Lady.

WEST MILTON, Saratoga Co., N. Y., July 6, 1861.

DR. HOSTETTER—Sir: I have long delayed writing to you my sincere thanks for the good you have done my daughter. I can truly say that nothing but the kind hand of Providence and your BITTERS have saved her from an early grave. For three years I have been doctoring her with syrups and all kinds of bitters that have been recommended to me for her, besides having two first-rate physicians; but all seemed to do her no good, while I was searching the almanacs and all the newspapers that I could get hold of, in hopes of finding something that would suit her case. Accidentally there came part of a newspaper around some goods that I bought at the Spa. In looking it over, I saw at a glance that your BITTERS was just what she needed. I sent the next day to Ballston Spa and got a bottle of your BITTERS. She commenced taking them, and such a change in one week with her appetite, and the distress that victuals occasioned, and that burning in the Stomach, I never saw in my life, as there was in her. She has taken three bottles, and is now able to work all the time. I think there is a little derangement of the Liver. Please send me three bottles more, which I think will cure her entirely. We and others thought she had a disease of the heart, but that beating and fluttering that would almost stop her from breathing at times, is all gone. Yours, with respect,

MRS. AMANDA M'PHERSON.

BLACK AS A CROW,

a few years since, was many a splendid head that is now grey or grizzled. Why not restore to the yet unwrinkled brow its raven honors? Five minutes effects the splendid transformation. In less time than a rifleman would take to three times, the greyest head may be made darker than the RAVEN'S WING.

Load and Fire

No matter of what undesirable tint the hair or whiskers or beard may be, the change to a superb and perfectly natural black or brown is accomplished by one application of without staining the skin or injuring the filaments. Manufactured by J. CRISTADORO, 6 Astor House, New York. Sold by all Druggists. Applied by all Hair Dressers.

THE ONLY REALLY ADJUSTABLE CANE MILL!

Long Tried and Well Liked!

FIRST PREMIUMS AT ALL NORTHWESTERN STATE FAIRS!

HIGHEST ENCOMIUMS

FROM PRESS AND PUBLIC EVERYWHERE!

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST!

THE LEVER PRINCIPLE IN OUR MILLS IS the only practicable and reliable mode yet applied for giving adjustability to Sugar Cane Crushers, and the lever and weight is, and must always be, the simplest and most unvarying power. With it the cane is pressed drier with less power and less liability of breakage than by any other mode. These Mills have been before the public for several years; they are extensively used throughout the entire sorghum growing sections of the country, and wherever used have invariably given entire satisfaction. They have been much improved for the present season, and now embrace points of excellence, aside from the leading feature of the lever, which of themselves place them far ahead of any other Mill in use. We build Mills of different sizes, geared to run by steam, water or horse power; also premium horse Powers, very simple in their construction and of great strength; also an Evaporator of our own planning, equal if not superior to anything now in use; and in fact, every article required by Sorghum Manufacturers.

OUR SORGHO HAND BOOK, containing full descriptions and illustrations of our different sized Mills and Sorghum Machinery, and embracing a treatise on the growth and manufacture of Sorghum, sent free on application.

Parties wanting our machinery should send in their orders early, as towards the close of the season we receive more orders than we can possibly fill.

HARRIS' PATENT

SELF-REGULATING

SUGAR CANE MILLS!

In these celebrated mills the CANE is made to govern the pressure, and gives a uniform pressure in proportion to the amount of cane going through the mill. The SELF-REGULATING PRESSURE removes all danger of breaking by uneven feeding, and increases the capacity fully one-third above other mills of the same size. It presses a large or small amount of cane equally dry by its own action.

Send for illustrated catalogue, containing full description of our MILLS, HORSE-POWERS, &c., also of our CELEBRATED CHAMPION EVAPORATOR, which was awarded the FIRST PREMIUM at the Wisconsin State Fair of 1865—there being the largest exhibition of sorghum machinery of any Fair yet held in the West. It also contains instructions for the selection of seed, cultivation and manufacturing, and testimonials of those using our machinery. ☞ Agents wanted everywhere. Spiritualism.

A singular illustration of the confidence which can be reposed in spiritualists occurred here a few days ago. Mr. Jocob VanTyne went out in the street to purchase some apples and having made the purchase, took out his wallet to pay for them and returned to the house with his fruit, leaving his wallet on the bottom boards projecting from the wagon box. Shortly after he missed the wallet which contained some $50 in gold, a gold pencil, and other valuables and started in pursuit of and overtook the apple wagon, but found no wallet. His wife, who by the way had followed him, chanced to see a neighbor (Mr. Hiram Sherman) pick up something and carry it into the house, which upon mentioning to her husband, aroused his suspicions and he immediately fastened upon Mr. Shermau as the man, who had the wallet, but that he might make assurance doubly sure, he concluded to go over to Saline and present the matter to a Medium there, and await the result. He accordingly went, and the aforesaid Medium described Mr. Sherman exactly as the man who had the pocket book. Mr. VanTyne upon his return got out a Search Warrant and searched Shermans premises, but without success—no pocket book could be found.

About a week after Mr. William Sherd, who lives north of the village, returned the wallet. He had found it in the road and had been inquiring for several days to find the owner. We advise our readers who are so unfortunate as to loose a wallet, to go forthwith to a Medium and ascertain its whereabouts.—Don't advertise it. (Mr. Sherd is a subscriber and might see the advertisement.)

Death of an Old Settler.

Mr. Solomon Snell, aged 88 years, died this morning at 2 o'clock, at the residence of his son, H. J. Snell, in this village.—Mr. Snell was one of our oldest citizens, a pioneer in Michigan's Territorial days. For many years he owned and carried on the old Mansion House, on the corner where the new block is now going up.—He has been gradually failing for several weeks, and though his death was not unexpected, still it caused a very general feeling of sorrow among our citizens, for another of our first settlers has departed. He was very active and vigorous for so old a man, till within a few weeks before his death.

Correction.

In our last weeks issue we published a short account of a surprise party in Solesville, Washtenaw County. We have since received a different version of the affair and which we believe to be the true one, from which we consider that Mr. R—— is more "sinned against than sinning." It appears that this Mr. R—— went to California several years ago and while there became acquainted with this woman, who now claims to be his wife. He became intimate with her while in California and lived with her until she became tired of him, and left him for another man, but he never married her nor thought of such a thing. It seems that he had some trouble with a man in Manchester, and this man for the purpose of having revenge upon R—— persuaded the woman to go over to Solesville and pass herself off as R——s wife. These we believe are the simple facts of the case.

One by one the ancient land marks of tue village are swept away.—Last Monday the old Barn in the rear of the "National" was torn down to make room for a new one. There would seem to be nothing very remarkable about the barn, or about the fact of tearing it down, but we are informed by Gen. Brown, that in an early day before the village could boast of a Church, this same old barn was occasionally used for religious purposes, and the first sermon ever listened to in Tecumseh was delivered within its walls. We have our doubts whether any clergyman in the village now would condescend to preach in such a building.

The Republican County Convention was held at Adrian last Saturday. There was a full delegation from all the towns in the county. A county ticket was nominated and delegates appointed to the State and Congressional conventions.—The following is the county Ticket put in nomination.

For Register—Morton Eddy, "
For Clerk—G. W. Westerman, Riga.
Prosecuting Attorney—C. E. Weaver, of Adrian.

Lynch Law at Mason.

John Taylor, the negro who attempted to murder the Buck family at Delhi, on Friday night, met a speedy punishment for his diabolical crime at Mason on Monday night. It will be recollected that he attempted to murder the wife, daughter and mother-in-law of Mr. Buck, and then escaped. None of the family have yet died, but it is thouget that the daughter cannot recover. After his capture he was lodged in the jail at Mason, the shire town of Ingham county. On Monday night, at about nine o'clock, twenty men, armed with rifles, marched into the quiet village of Mason, and proceeded to the County Jail. They were followed by twenty more, armed with revolvers.—They were under command of one George Norton, of Delhi. They approached the jail, and were met by Sheriff Moody. They acquainted the Sheriff with their mission, stating they wished to get possession of the negro.—The Sheriff and Deputy protested against their action. The crowd then rushed up the stairs to the door, three of them seized the Sheriff and held him. A sledge was then brought and the door of the negro's cell knocked off. He was taken out, when some of the mob proposed to shoot him on the spot, others that he be hung there. Sheriff Moody came forward, and stated that as they had taken from my custody the negro, they should not hang him there, and requested them to take him elsewhere. The captain of the gang spoke and said, out of respect to the citizens of Mason and the Sheriff, they would go elsewhere to execute the culprit. They then repaired to a place about half a mile northwest of the village, near the railroad, and halted in front of a thorn-apple tree. A fire was kindled, a rope thrown over a limb of the tree, and the noose adjusted around the prisoner's neck. A ring was then formed, and Mr. Buck permitted to question Taylor. He confessed the crime with which he was charged, but denied that he had ever killed any one.—The poor wretch trembled in every limb, and so great was his fright that he once fainted. He soon revived, and upon being further questioned stated that he had threatened to kill a man at Pulaski once, but did not carry out his threat. He was then prepared for execution. He asked Buck's forgiveness for what he had done.

Some one here called for a Minister to pray for the negro: no one responded; a call was then made for some professing Christian to offer up a prayer. Still no response, when a low, drunken fellow named Cook, of Eaton Rapids, came forward, and said he would pray for the d—d nigger. He then began a blasphemous address in the shape of a prayer, concluding by saying he hoped that if the nigger went to Heaven God would put him among the niggers there, but that he hoped the negro would go to hell where all niggers ought to go. When this wretch had finished his blasphemous harangue, some one shouted for the Captain to give the word. The Captain was not to be found. The lieutenant was then called upon; but he stated he had done all he should, and declined to have anything further to do with the matter. Cook then stepped forward and said he would take charge of the affair. He then counted one, two, three, and gave the word. The rope was quickly pulled and the body of the would-be murderer was swinging in the air. Not a muscle moved nor were there any signs of life after he was pulled up. It is thought he died befrore the the word was given, being frightened to death. The body hung for fifteen minutes, when it was cut down. Several wished to shoot at the body while hanging, but were restrained. The lynchers then proceeded to dig a grave at the foot of a tree, in which they proposed to bury the body. The owner of the land came forward and protested against the burial, and the corpse was then thrown in a wagon and carried off. Thus ends the last act of the drama.

Weddings.

The following list of "commemorative weddings" is interesting to both old and young: The wedding is the "love wedding" at the end of the first month; the end of the honeymoon is the "sugar wedding;" two years after marriage is the "paper wedding;" the fifth anniversary is the "wooden wedding;" the tenth the "tin wedding;" the fifteenth the "crystal wedding;" the twentiete the "china wedding;" the twenty-fifth the "silver wedding;" the fiftieth the "golden wedding;" the seventy-fifth the "diamond wedding." These various anniversary celebrations are becoming very common in America, and they are very pleasant occasions.

MUSICAL REVIEW.—We have received the first copy of a new paper published at Chicago, by H. M. Higgins, the well known music publisher by the title of the "CHICAGO MUSICAL REVIEW."

While the publishes does not intend to make the REVIEW severely technical, or musically classical, he will not descend to musical twaddle, but trusts, by pre serving the golden mean, to render it a vade mecum for the student and a welcome guest at every fireside—in other words, an honest, impartial and dignified representative of Western musical interests.

A Monster Meeting.

Union Hall was filled to its utmost capacity Tuesday evening by the friends of temperance, to hear the addresses of Rev. John Russell and Rev. D. C. Wright. So large was the attendance that extra seats had to be procured for the accommodation of the audience, which numbered not less than 1,500, and many were obliged to go away for want of room. This speaks well for the interest manifested by the people in the temperance cause.—Jackson Citizen.

BASE BALL TOURNAMENT.—We learn that a Base Ball Tournament will come off at Pokagon, Cass County, commencing Sept. 11th. Prizes to the amount of $100 are offered by the Comet Club, of that village. Here is a chance for base ball players to exercise their skill.

STAMPS.—Under the new Excise Law which took effect August 1st, receipts for the delivering of goods and property, other than money or instruments requiring the payments of money are not required to be stamped. This does away with the nuisance of stamping Express and Freight Books, as heretofore required, without regard to the size, weight or value of the package delivered.

TO TRAVELERS.—Pleasure seekers this year should bear in mind that there is a great deal of sickness being caused by a change of water and climate. Before leaving home provide a bottle of Coe's Dyspepsia Cure, it is an excellent antidote, (preven is always better than cure.)

Married.

In the Episcopal Church, in this village by Rev. Mr. Staunton, of Adrian, on Thursday, Aug. 23d, Mr. LEWIS OLMSTEAD and Miss CYNTHIA SPOFFORD, both of this village.

May theirs be a long and happy life, is the wish of their many friends.

Arrival and Departure of the Males.

ARRIVE—at the Store of R. C. Moore at all hours through the day; buy their Cloths, Cassimeres, Shirting, Flannels &c. and DEPART—at their option, with large bundles of Dry Goods bought at the very lowest Market prices.

Rev. J. D. Fulton, of Boston, preached in the Baptist Church, in this village, last Sunday afternoon and evening. The house was filled on both occasions and the audience was well pleased with both discourses.

Mr. Alfred James was taken seriously ill last Friday and was quite sick for three or four days, but he is now improving.

He went up to the lakes on a fishing excursion, and indulged too freely in bathing. The water being very chilly, he got chilled, which brought on an attack of Dysentery.

Building.

Dr. Catlin's new House on the corner of Chicago and Oneida streets is progressing finely and will be an ornament to that portion of the village. The walls are nearly up and the building will be enclosed in a few days.

David VanTyne is putting another story upon his house and refitting and overhauling it thoroughly. When finished it will be one of the finest residences in the northern part of the village.

M. Primrose is erecting a new house in the south-west part of the village.

YEARNINGS.

BY S. J. M.

Oh heart of my heart for one brief minute near thee,
To soothe and to strengthen, to comfort and cheer thee,
To press to my bosom, that bosom true hearted,
To tell all the love thoughts that come since we parted,
To say how I yearn for you, dream of you, pray for you,
How my heart is still with you while I am away from you;
Oh dearest I'd give a whole life to be near you
Were it but for a moment to comfort and cheer you.

Come to me dearest, I'm lonely without thee,
Day time and night time I'm thinking about thee;
Night time and day time in dreams I behold thee,
Unwelcome the waking which ceases to fold thee;
Come to me darling, my sorrow to lighten,
Come in thy beauty to bless and to brighten;
Come in thy womanhood, meekly and lowly;
Come in thy lovingness, queenly and holy.

Swallows will flit round the desolate ruin,
Telling of Spring and its joyous renewing;
And thoughts of thy love and its manifold treasure,
Are circling my heart with the promise of pleasure.
O! Spring of my spirit, Oh! May of my bosom,
Shine out on my soul till it bud into blossom;
The waste of my life has a interest within it,
And thy fondness alone to the sunlight can win it.

Figure which moves like a song through the even,
Features lit up with the reflex of heaven;
Eyes like the skies of poor Erin, our mother,
Where, sunshine and shadow are chasing each other;
Smiles coming seldom, but oh blithe and simple,
And opening their eyes from the heart of a dimple;
Oh! thanks to the Savior that even thy seeming
Is left to the sleeper to brighten his dreaming.

You have been glad when you knew I was gladdened
Dear, are you sad now to hear I am saddened?
Our hearts ever answer in tone and in time, love,
As octave to octave, or rhyme unto rhyme; love;
I cannot smile, but your cheek will be glowing;
You cannot weep, but my tears will be flowing;
You will not linger when I will have died, love;
Your soul in my keeping whate'er may betide, love.

Come to me dear, ere I die of my sorrow;
Rise on my gloom like the sun of to-morrow,
Strong, swift and fond as the words which I speak, love,
With a song on your lip, and a smile on your cheek, love;
Come, I'll forget all the sorrows that bound me,
When visions of thee, far away, float around me—
Come, for my heart in your absence is dreary,
Haste, for my spirit is sickened and weary.

Come and I'll tell how I hate the cold seeming
Of earth and its pleasures while blissfully dreaming
Of thee and thy truth, and thy tender confiding,
And the love that my soul takes so lofty a pride in.
Come to the arms which alone shall caress thee:
Come to the heart which is throbbing to bless thee,
For still do I yearn for you, dream of you, pray for you,
And my heart is still with you while I am away from you.

LA TOUR D'AUVERGNE.

Exploits of the First Grenadier of France.

For many a year there was a touching and beautiful custom to be witnessed in a certain regiment of French grenadiers, and which was meant to commemorate the heroism of a departed comrade.

When the companies assembled for parade, and the roll was called, there was one name to which the owner could not answer—it was that of La Tour d'Auvergne.

When it was called, the oldest sergeant present stepped a pace forward, and, raising his hand to his cap, said proudly:

"Died on the field of honor."

For fourteen years this custom was continued, and only ceased when the restored Bourbons, to please their foreign masters forbade everything that was calculated to preserve the spirits of the soldiers of France.

La Tour d'Auvergne was not unworthy in life the honor thus paid him after his death. He was educated for the army, entered in 1767, and in 1781 served under the Duke de Crillon at the seige of Port Mahon He served always with distinction, but constantly refused offers of promotion, saying that he was only fit for the command of a company of grenadiers; but finally, the various grenadier companies being united, he found himself in command of a body of 8,000 men, while retaining only the rank of captain.

Hence he was known as the First Grenadier of France.

But it is of one particular exploit of his that we wish to write, more than his career in general.

When he was forty years of age he went on a visit to friend, not far from a section of country that was soon to become the scene of a campaign. While there he was busy in acquainting himself with the features of the country, thinking it not unlikely that this knowledge might be of use to him, and while here the brave grenadier was astonished to learn that the war had been rapidly shifted to this quarter, and that a regiment of Austrians was pushing on to occupy a narrow pass about ten miles from where he was staying, and the possession of which would give them an opportunity to prevent an important movement of the French which was then on foot.

They hoped to surprise this post, and were moving so rapidly upon it that they were not more than two hours distant from the place where he was staying, and which they would have to pass in their march. It matters not how he heard the news. It is sufficient to say that he determined at once to act upon it.

He had no idea of being captured by the enemy in their advance, and he at once set off for the pass. He knew that the pass was defended by a stout tower and a garrison of thirty men, and he hoped to be able to warn the men of their danger.

He hastened on, and, arriving there found the tower in a perfect condition. It had just been vacated by the garrison, who had heard of the approach of the Austrians, and had been seized with a panic thereat and had fled, leaving their arms, consisting of thirty excellent muskets.

La Tour d'Auvergne gnashed his teeth with rage as he discovered this. Searching in the building he found several boxes of ammunition which the cowards had not destroyed. For a moment he was in despair, but then with a grim smile he began to fasten the main door and pile against it such articles as he could find.

When he had done this he loaded all the guns he could find, and placed them, together with a good supply of ammunition, under the loop holes that commanded the road by which the enemy must advance.

Then he ate heartily of the provisions which he had brought with him, and sat down to wait. He had absolutely formed the heroic resolution to defend the tower alone against the enemy.

There were some things in his favor in such an undertaking. The pass was steep and narrow, and the enemy's troops could enter it only in double files, and in doing this would be exposed to the fire from the tower. The original garrison of thirty men could easily have held it against a division, and now one man was about to attempt to hold it against a regiment.

It was dark when La Tour d'Auvergne reached the tower, and he had to wait some time for the enemy. They were longer in coming than he had expected, and for a while he was tempted to believe they had abandoned the expedition.

About midnight, however, his practiced ear caught the tramp of feet. Every moment the sound came nearer, and at last he heard them entering the defile. Immediately he discharged a couple of muskets into the darkness to let them know that he knew of their presence and intentions, and he heard the quick, short commands of the officers, and, from the sounds, he supposed that the troops were retiring from the pass. Until the morning he was undisturbed. The Austrian commander, feeling assured that the garrison had been informed of his movements, and was prepared to receive him, saw that he could not surprise the post as he had hoped to do, and deemed it prudent to wait until daylight before making his attack.

At sunrise he summoned the garrison to surrender. A grenadier answered the summons.

"Say to your commander," he said, in reply to the messenger, "that this garrison will defend this post to the last extremity."

The officer who had borne the flag of truce retired, and in about ten minutes a piece of artillery wass brought into the pass and opened on the tower. But to effect this, the piece had to be placed directly in front of the tower, and within easy musket range of it. They had scarcely got the gun in position when a rapid fire opened on it from the tower, and continued with such marked effect that the piece was withdrawn after the second discharge, with a loss of five men.

This was a bad beginning, so half an hour after the gun was withdrawn the Austrian Colonel ordered an assault.

As the troops entered the defile they were received with a rapid and accurate fire, so that when they had passed over half the distance they had to traverse, they lost fifteen men. Disheartened by this, they returned to the mouth of the defile.

Three more assaults were repulsed in this manner, and the enemy by sunset had lost forty-five men, of whom ten were killed.

The firing from the tower had been rapid and accurate, but the Austrian commander had noticed this peculiarity about it—every shot seemed to come from the same place. For a while this perplexed him, but at last he came to the conclusion that there were a number of loop-holes close together in the tower, so constructed as to command the ravine perfectly.

At sunset the last assault was made and repulsed, and at dark the Austrian commander sent a second summons to the garrison.

This time the answer was favorable The garrison offered to surrender at sunrise the next morning, if allowed to march out with their arms and return to the army unmolested. After some hesitation the terms were accepted.

Meantime, La Tour d'Auvergne has passed an anxious day in the tower. He had opened the fight with an armament of thirty loaded muskets, but had not been able to discharge them all. He had fired with surprising rapidity, but with surprising accuracy, for it was well known in the army that he never threw away a shot. He had determined to stand to his post until he had accomplished his end, which was to hold the place twenty-four hours, in order to allow the French army time to complete its maneuver. After that, he knew the pass would be of no consequence to the enemy.

When the demand for a surrender came to him after the last assault, he consented to it upon the conditions named.

The next day at sunrise the Austrian troops lined the pass in two files, extending from the mouth to the tower, leaving a space between them for the garrison to pass out.

The heavy door of the tower opened slowly, and in a few minutes a bronzed and scarred grenadier, literally loaded down with muskets, came out and passed down the line of troops. He walked with difficulty under his heavy load.

To the surprise of the Austrians, no one followed him from the tower.

In astonishment the Austrian Colonel rode up to him, and asked him in French why the garrison did not come out.

"I am the garrison, Colonel," said the soldier, proudly.

"What," exclaimed the Colonel; "do you mean to tell me that you alone have held that tower against me?"

"I have the honor, Colonel," was the reply.

"What possessed you to make such an attempt, grenadier?"

"The honor of France was at stake."

The Colonel gazed at him for a moment with undisguised admiration; then, raising his cap, he said, warmly: "Grenadier, I salute you. You have proved yourself the bravest of the brave."

The officer caused all the arms which La Tour d'Auvergne could not carry to be collected, and sent them all, with the grenadier, into the French lines, together with a note relating the whole affair.

When the knowledge of it came to the ears of Napoleon, he offered to promote La Tour d'Auvergne, but the latter declined to accept the promotion, saying that he preferred to remain where he was.

This brave soldier met his death in an action at Aberhausen, in June, 1800, and the simple but expressive scene at roll call in his regiment, was commenced and continued by the express command of the Emperor himself.

The Origin of Prairies.

At the annual meeting of the "American Scientific Association," held at Buffalo last week, Prof. J. S. Newberry read an instructive paper on this subject, of which the following is an abstract:

Dr. Newberry said that great diversity of opinion existed as to the causes which had produced over half our continent a growth of forests, and over the other half only an herbacious vegetation, but in this, as in so many other questions that divided the scientific world, if the disputants could meet on common ground, and each study the phenomena observed by others, and not exclusively his own data, there would be comparatively little discord. He had spent some years on the prairies in various parts of the far West, and he felt confident that any one who would go over the ground he had traversed would agree with him that the presence or absence of forests as a general rule depended on the amount of precipitated moisture. The central portions of this continent, as others, are comparatively dry, and were consequently treeless, except on the mountain belts, which acted as condensors, and precipitated an amount of water which sustained a forest growth. The rain-fall was greater in that part of the continent east of the Mississippi, and here we have an almost unbroken forest.

Along the line where the treeless and forest districts meet, local causes determine the presence or absence of trees. Belts of timber bordered the streams and covered the more porous and absorbent soil—while level surfaces, with a fine unporous soil—sometimes very wet and sometimes very dry, sustained only growth of grass, which could endure their alternations, fatal to trees. Annual fires had their influence in extending the area of grassy surface, and over much of this grassy surface, and over much of this middle ground, by man's invention, the causes limiting the growth of trees could be removed and their forest area extended. The forces of nature were here nicely balanced, and slight causes would make one or the other preponderate. The many theories which attributed prairies to other causes than want of water were wholly erroneous, of only local value. On the great prairies west of the Mississippi, every variety of soil and surface failed to sustain trees, and there only a change of climatic conditions would change the grass-covered surface to forest.

CLEARNESS OF THE AIR IN COLORADO.—A Colorado correspondent gives the following illustrations of the extreme limpidity of the atmosphere in Colorado:

"Immediately in front of us rise the two shattered and worn fragments of what was once an immense ball of red stone; they look 100 feet distant, and 50 feet high, when in point of fact they are not less than 2,000 feet off, with an elevation of something like 300 feet. Perhaps you say, 'What is the matter with your eyes? Can't you tell 100 feet from 1,000, or see the difference between 50 and 300?' Why, yes, I can under ordinary circumstances, but here, in this wonderful atmosphere, distance is lost. To con inue. Beyond the red stone fragments rises a hill, beyond that two mountains, the second higher than the first, obscuring from our view all the peak below a point higher than the line of vegetation. The peak appears to be so near as to be fully within the range of cannon shot. Very well. Now the distance to the peak is just 28 miles."

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK.

General Intelligence.

A Herald special contradicts the current statement that Stanton is about to resign.

The whole sum awarded to the captors of Booth, Atzerodt, Payne and Harold is given at $105,000.

A New York Times special says: "It is stated upon good authority that Judge Holt, Judge Advocate General, will be superseded in a few days. His successor is not named."

Jeff. Davis, says the New York Herald, will soon be released on parole or bail, holding himself amenable to the process of the court which is to dispose of the case in October next.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has issued a circular prohibiting any of the Assistant Assessors from running or scheming for any elective office while they remain Assessors.

The commissioner of agriculture reports that, notwithstanding the unfavorable weather during a part of the season, the crops in the North, Northwest and portions of the South will be unusually large.

Secretary Seward has written a letter to Gen. Kilpatrick, minister to Chili, stating that it will be the policy of this government to assist all struggling republics on this continent against foreign intervention.

The President, it is said, intimated to General Howard, a few days since, that his resignation would be acceptable, whereupon that official refused to comply with the hint. The general impression now is that he will be summarily ejected.

The President has issued a proclamation declaring the insurrection in Texas at an end, and restoring the writ of habeas corpus throughout the United States. This practically terminates the military occupation of the southern States, and completes their restoration as far as the executive is concerned.

Another new twenty-five cent counterfeit note is noticed in circulation, and it is said to be well engraved and a good imitation of the genuine, except that the eye in the engraved head of Fessenden is blackened. In the lower left hand corner of the counterfeit the word "Assistant" has the last two letters transposed, making it "Assistant."

Lieut. Gen. Sherman has assumed command of the department of the west and has divided it into four sub-departments. Gen. Ord commands that of Arkansas with headquarters at Little Rock, Gen. Hancock that of Missouri, with headquarters at Leavenworth, Gen. Philip St. George Cooke that of the Platte, with headquarters for the present at Omaha, and Gen. Terry that of Minnesota, with headquarters to be chosen at his discretion. General Thomas remains in command of the department of the Tennessee.

Secretary McCulloch in declining an invitation of some Boston merchants to a dinner, states some interesting facts regarding the finances of the nation. He says that the national debt is $250,000,000 less than it was expected it would be when the war ended. During the last year the reduction has been at the rate of $10,000,000 per month. He does not, however, disguise the fact that great financial difficulties are still to be overcome; that our present prosperity is rather more apparent than real; that we are, in fact, exposed to all the dangers which attend an inflated and redeemable currency, which diminishes labor, the true source of national wealth, and stimulates speculation and extravagance, which lead invariably to thriftlessness and demoralization.

Cholera.

About a dozen deaths a day from cholera were taking place in Chicago last week.

The cholera has mostly disappeared from the eastern cities and has greatly decreased in the west.

The cholera has appeared in New Orleans, and 59 deaths were recorded from the disease in 36 hours.

Official reports from St. Louis state that 895 persons were buried in that city during the past week, of whom 648 died of cholera.

Foreign News.

The Great Eastern with her consorts has been spoken in mid ocean by the steamship Britannia.

The chancellor of the French embassy at Honolulu has been assassinated in his bed, by a Chinese servant.

Peace has also been signed between Prussia and Bavaria. Prussia has determined to destroy the independence of the kingdom of Hanover, Electoral Hesse and the city of Frankfort and annex them to her rule. Bavaria has submitted to the demands of the Prussian government. The king of Hanover has been ordered by the king of Prussia to abdicate his crown.

Peace has not been formally concluded between Prussia, Austria, and Bavaria, but negotiations are satisfactorily progressing, and it is believed will soon be successfully terminated. Napoleon has refused to grant the assistance of French troops to aid Maximillian, and it is reported in Paris that the Emperor, "so-called," will soon return to Europe. The reported plot to blow up the House of Parliament was greatly exaggerated. The Atlantic cable proposes to increase its already enormous tariff of rates.

The Prussian chambers are discussing the question of annexing to Prussia the kingdom of Hanover, the electorate of Hesse, the duchy of Nassau and the free city of Frankfort. The peace congress is session at Prague, and a peace will speedily be signed between the late hostile powers. Napoleon denies that he has any intention of annexing Belgium to France, and the French press is silent on the subject of an extension of their frontier. Italy is about to treat with the pope for a cessation of his temporal dominions, and to make Rome the capital of the kingdom.

Dispatches over the cable, dated at Berlin, on the evening of the 15th, state that a Council of State is sitting in that city, considering the question of re-annexing the Southern German States to the confederation. The British Government, it is stated, has given its consent to the proposed Canadian confederation. It is also stated that the terms of a loan to the colonies for the completion of a colonial railroad from Halifax to the Grand Trunk Railroad have been settled. It is reported that Napoleon has abandoned the idea of annexing the German provinces on the Rhine. The Paris Moniteur denies that the supposed warlike purchases of the French Government show an intent of war.

The South.

Gov. Humphrey of Mississippi has called a special session of the Legislature of that State for the purpose of revising the election laws.

The racing stables of Maj. Buford, located at Nicholasville, Ky., were destroyed by fire on Thursday night, the 15th. About 30 horses were burned to death, one of which was valued at $7,000.

A plot has been discovered in New Orleans to assassinate General Sheridan, commander of the Gulf Department. It was designed to accomplish his death by the explosion of a shell made for the occasion.

A general order was issued on the 23d at New Orleans, by General Sheridan, revoking General Baird's order declaring martial law in the city, and appointing a Military Governor.

An old man was arrested at Memphis on the 19th, charged with being a vagrant. On searching him $7,000 in gold was found on his person and a gold frame locket containing a picture of J. Wilkes Booth, set with diamonds and valued at $5,000.

A vessel on entering the harbor of Charleston, South Carolina, on the 10th, struck a concealed torpedo, the existence of which had been forgotten by the authorities. The schooner exploded the machine, blowing her bottom out and instantly sinking her. One man was drowned.

A call has been issued for a national convention of soldiers and sailors who indorse the reconstruction policy of the President and the action of the Philadelphia Convention, to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, on the 17th of September next.

John Tabor has caused a decided sensation at New Orleans by starting the New Orleans Herald, a small five cent daily paper, the only paper in the city that is sold for less than ten cents a copy. The other newspapers refuse to allow the Herald, or any other paper that is sold at less than ten cents, to have the associated press dispatches, the newsboys refuse to sell the paper on the street, and the first number was published without a paying subscriber or advertiser.

The West.

Mr. Harding, editor of the Indianapolis Herald, cowhided Mr. Long, of the Journal, on the streets of that city on the 24th.

A few days since a man by the name of Dirck killed a boy in Nebraska, escaped to Iowa, was captured, taken back, and lynched.

Twenty-two persons are known to have been drowned by the Root River, Minn. freshet; fourteen of the bodies were recovered, leaving eight still missing.

At Walcott, Iowa during the storm on the 11th, a flash of lightning killed an infant child of Mr. Alis, which was sleeping between its parents neither of whom was injured.

Full returns from Colorado Territory give Chilcott, the Union candidate for delegate to Congress, a decided majority over A. C. Hunt, notwithstanding all previous reports.

Mallory, the soldier who robbed the safe of Major Grierson, at Nashville, and was recently captured in Indiana, has pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to ten years' hard labor on the Dry Tortugas.

A Cincinnati street railroad car ran over a boy named Jerry Lerry, on the 22d, nearly crushing him to death. It was done through the neglect of the conductor. His friends will bring suit against the Company for damages of $10,000.

Samuel M. Covert, the murderer of the Roosa family, at Deerfield, Warren county, Ohio, on the 26th of December, 1864, was hung on the 24th at Lebanon, the county seat of Warren county. He died protesting his innocence to the last.

On the morning of the 19th, a heavy fire on South Water street, Chicago, destroyed half a million dollars worth of property, most of which was covered by insurance. Two hundred thousand dollars worth of tobacco, belonging to Van Horn, Murray & Co. was burned up.

The great trial of implements at Mattoon, Ill., September 4th, promises to be very large. Entries of implements and machines are constantly being made by manufacturers in this and other states. Those intending to compete for premiums should notify the Secretary of the State Agricultural Society at once, so that ample arrangements may be made by the committee.

A dispatch from Leavenworth says reports from Forts Sedgwick and Laramie confirm the fact of the burning of trains north of Fort Reno, and between Laramie and Bridger's Ferry. Indian guides also report a battle at Fort Reno, in which from thirty-five to forty soldiers were killed. It is now presumed that the Indian war has commenced in earnest.

Some two months ago, Dr. Blackburn, of Cincinnati, brother of the City Clerk, under mental hallucination, said to be a love affair, attempted to kill himself with a pistol, shooting himself in the head four or five times, but recovered. On the 21st he left his brother's house, deliberately walked down to the Ohio river, at the foot of Smith street, pulled off his clothes, plunged in the river, and drowned.

The Cincinnati Gazette announces that, owing to the general stagnation of business, the subscription to aid in the erection of the new Opera House in Cincinnati has not met with the encouragement the manager expected. Mr. Handy, endorsed by some of the most responsible citizens, has therefore concluded to dispose of the remaining tickets by awarding prizes on the plan of the Chicago Art Association.

The grand army of the Republic, started some three months ago at Chicago, now extends throughout Illinois and Wisconsin, and has its ramifications in Iowa, Minnesota, and Indiana. It is said to include sixty thousand of the soldiers of Illinois, and ranks none but actual soldiers. It is known by its initials, "G. A. R.," and its object is to aid all soldiers wherever they need aid, to reward them, and as far as practicable, wherever they deserve reward.

At Rock Island, Illinois, Aug. 11, Herman Litzen, aged 12 years, was drowned. It appears that several other boys went at play in the water, when an older boy took Herman out into the river, over his head, pretending to teach him to swim. The Litzen boy was frightened, and offered the other boy 25 cents if he would let him go home. The other boy said, "D—n you, I'll make you swim or drown you," and he took him again and left him. Attempts were made to rescue him, but all proved ineffectual.

A man from Chicago, named M. A. Hawks, stopping at the Mansion House, St. Paul, accidentally shot and killed his wife, on the 21st, while cleaning a revolver in their room A servant of the house was in the room at the time. The husband and wife were newly married, and the casualty is deplored by a large circle of acquaintances there. A Coroner's inquest was held at two o'clock, and the verdict was in accordance with the facts stated. Hawks was spending the summer there for his health, and so strange an impression has the accident made upon him that he has become temporarily deranged. His family reside at Lincoln, Logan county, Illinois.

A terrible accident happened at West Auburn, Iowa, last week. It seems that Mr. Charles Hathaway, Mrs. Elizabeth M. Lane, and her two daughters, one aged 15 years and one 17 months, wife and children of I. S. Lane, Esq., of that place, undertook to cross the Turkey river in a skiff just above the dam at West Auburn. Mr. Lane saw them get into the boat about 2 o'clock P. M., and start across. He did not wait to see them land on the other side, but went to his work as usual, and returning to his house toward evening, and not finding his wife and children, he supposed they were at some of the neighbors; but shortly afterward, being questioned by the wife of Mr. Hathaway as to whether he had seen Mr. H. and not having seen him, led him to suspect something was wrong. He immediately went to the river, and it was not long until pieces of the boat were found, and the babe's bonnet. It then became certain that the parties who were last seen crossing in the boat above the dam, had gone over and their boat dashed to pieces upon the rocks below, nd those in it drowned.

The city of Adrian, Michigan, has had a sensation quite up to the metropolitan pattern. The story begins that Scott Roberts, a young painter, ran away with his neighbor's daughter living across the road, and married her last fall, since when the two families have imitated the feuds of Guelphs and Ghibelines. Nor did the newly married runaway pair live at peace with each other. Their quarrels were often fierce and boisterous, and the birth of a child to them, a few week's since only aggravated the situation. Roberts and his wife were then living at his mother's, when he took her wardrobe across to her father's house, and directed her thenceforth to live apart from him. But even this didn't end the matter. He constantly annoyed her with offensive serenades, and finally made a proposition that she should leave her child—which he would put out to board—and go with him to Detroit or Toledo for a residence. To alarm her pending these negotiations, last Friday night he feigned a suicide in front of her house, and roused the whole neighborhood. This seems to have had the effect, for the loving twain were about town Saturday morning, making preparations for their speedy departure, according to programme stated. But the woman's love still clung to her child, and to frighten her he made an attempt to murder her on the public street, by firing three pistol shots in close proximity to her head. The woman ran, the husband followed, and the crowd took after both, when Scott Roberts, in sudden frenzy, unclasped his pocket knife, and cut his throat, dying in a few minutes. And that was the end of a runaway match.

Call for the Soldiers' and Sailors' Convention.

The following is the call for the convention of soldiers, which will be held at Cleveland, Ohio, September 17, instead of Chicago, as heretofore announced:

To the Soldiers and Sailors who served in the Army and Navy of the United States during the late rebellion:

In pursuance of a resolution of a meeting of soldiers now or lately in the Union army, held in this city last evening, we invite those who approve of the restoration policy of the President and the principles announced by the National Union convention at Philadelphia, to assemble at Cleveland, on the 17th day of September next, for consultation on the momentous issues now convulsing our country.

We need not argue to you at length the importance of these issues, nor your duty to take part in their settlement. After five years of fierce and destructive war, in which our arms were gloriously triumphant, the Union for which we fought is still practically unrestored. Why is this? We struggled to maintain the rightful supremacy of the general Government; to conquer all who in arms disputed its authority, and to make every rebellious citizen yield to its laws. We held throughout the war that the Union was indissoluble, and its powers, as expounded by its courts, supreme; that no State can, at its own notion, withdraw or at the will of its sister States, be excluded; and that the duty of each State to maintain the Union, and its right to take part in the Government, are also absolute.

Every object of the war ever recognized by or known to the army and navy has been thoroughly achieved. The Southern people, decimated, impoverished, and subdued, have, for more than a year past, abandoned the rebellion, and now only ask that the Union for which we fought may be recognized as existing, and that they may be dealt with as the Constitution and laws prescribe. In their anxiety to restore the Union, and bring harmony to its councils, they have gone beyond a mere silent submission to its laws. Through their delegates at the National Union Convention they solemnly renounced the doctrines of nullification and secession, from which the war arose; repudiated the rebel debt; proclaimed that the faith of the nation is pledged to the continuance of bounties and pension to loyal soldiers and sailors and their families; declared slavery forever abolished, and the freedman entitled to the equal protection of law in person and property with their former masters. Their platform is not only one of emphatic loyalty, but is, moreover, most liberal in spirit on all the great issues growing of the war.

The character of the men who represented the Southern States in that convention precludes us from believing this enunciation of principles to be insincere. They sent to it their foremost statesmen; men who, like Rives, Graham, Orr, Parsons, Sharkey, Houston, Brackenboro, Hunt, Manning and Stevens, were known throughout the land before the war as men of the highest character and influence. Among the five hundred delegates from the South, there was not a voice or vote dissenting from the resolutions adopted by the convention. If the best of the Southern people are ever to be believed, we must accept these solemn declarations as sincere. We do accept them as conclusive evidence that a great majority of the southern people, sick of war and anarchy, and longing for a restoration of free Government, are ready to bear true allegiance to the Constitution and laws of the Union. We are, therefore, unwilling to see the Southern people held longer in vassalage. They are our countrymen—citizens of the United States, who have incurred penalties, but who have rights. Those who willfully participated in the rebellion, and who are unpardoned, are subject to the penalties prescribed for treason; but though individuals may be tried, convicted, and punished, communities cannot, nor can States, and their people, without a plain violation of the constitution, be denied the right of representation, through men personally qualified, in the councils of the nation.

The intention of Congress seems to be to deprive them of representation just so long as it suits the purposes of the Radical party. Many assert that it will concede the right whenever the constitutional amendment shall have been adopted, and each prescribed State shall have ratified it; but it is quite certain that the amendment will not be ratified by three fourths of the States, and therefore that it will not be adopted. Some, perhaps many, of the Northern States will reject it, and we cannot expect its legal ratification by any of the lately insurrectionary States. If there were no other reason why the Southern States will reject it, it is enough that it proposes to disfranchise nearly all the men in the South who have influence over the masses of the people. If none were to be disfranchised except officers of the rebel army, we still could not expect the South to adopt it; for a large majority of men in the lately insurrectionary States, through compulsion or choice, served in the rebel armies, and their votes alone would overwhelmingly defeat it. Would Union soldiers, to recover political privileges, disfranchise their leaders, whom they love and revere for their heroic virtues? How, then, can we expect Southern soldiers to disfranchise and degrade their old commanders?

If there is no probability that the amendment will be ratified by three fourths of the States, the plan of restoration which Congress appears to have determined on is at best impracticable. That proposed by the President, and approved by the National Union Convention, is feasible, and, we believe, safe. We have no fear that the South can ever overthrow the Federal Government, or even disturb its career of power and glory. They will be the last of the States to rebel; and if they shall again rise in insurrection the loyal people can and will subdue, and, if need be, destroy them. The Government has asserted its power for self-preservation, and the devastation and misery of the South proclaim, to this generation, at least, the crime and the terrible penalties of treason. Beholding their woes, and contrasting their weakness and our strength, we could afford to show the confidence and courage of magnanimity. We might well let our vanquished opponents arise, and, like James Fitzjames at Coilantogle Ford, staunch their wounds and forgive their treason.

But we are not asked to be magnanimous, but only consistent and just. This we cannot refuse to be without a violation of the Constitution of our country, and risk of its utter overthrow. We seek and will have no association in political action with men, North or South, who are not avowedly, in our opinion, sincerely faithful to the constitutional principles for which we fought; but if men who have taught or practiced treason now openly renounce their errors, and maintain with us the true principles of our Government, we shall not reject their co-operation when the restoration of the Union and the preservation of our form of government are in issue. However much we regret to sever cherished political associations, and to co-operate with former enemies, we must prefer to act with those who have been wrong and are now right, rather than those who were right and now are wrong.

Believing that our country is again in peril, we appeal to you, who have fought to save it, and who hold it dearer and more sacred, than all party ties, to come to the rescue. Let the soldier and sailor agreeing with us in sentiment, but who cannot attend in person, send delegates through the action of their societies or conventions. Let us meet in force at Cleveland on the 17th of September, the anniversary of the day when the Constitution was proclaimed by our forefathers, and let us vie in restoring the Union and the liberties it was ordained to secure.

Union Convention Call.

To the Loyal Hearts of the Nation:

Ninety years ago our fathers proclaimed a new theory of government, founded on protection to the rights of the citizen. On the 5th day of September next it is proposed to hold a grand mass meeting in the shades of Independence Hall, in the city of Philadelphia, to reassert the doctrines of our ancestors. All who believe with our fathers that the constitutional rights of the citizen are the first and paramount object of Republican Government, are invited to attend.

The three hundred thousand Union defenders from the South who stood in the ranks of the Union army, send greeting to brave veterans of the North. Through our representative delegates to the Southern Unionists we send a hearty invitation for our comrades in a common cause to meet us on this spot, made sacred to liberty. Come one, come all! Come in the uniform of blue! Come as you came to the South on the great mission to relieve it from the despotism of usurping traitors. Come as you came when you caused the hearts of the depressed Unionists to leap with joy at the reappearance of the old flag, upheld by strong hands and brave deeds. Let the Unionists of the North and South come together and renew the pledge to sustain liberty, order and law.

Editors are respectfully requested to assist in giving this invitation an extended circulation.

By order of the Committee of Arrangements for the Convention of Southern Unionists.

Heavy Robbery.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer, Aug. 17.

One of the most daring and heavy robberies that has taken place for some time in this country occurred at Newport, Rhode Island, a few days since, in which a party of gentlemen from this city were the victims to the tune of $100,000 and upward. This party were Messrs. John H. Smith, J. R. Whaley, Franklin Hall, F. T. Smith, and S. Forbus. These gentlemen were in attendance at the Saratoga races, and during the meeting were quite successful pecuniarily. After the races were concluded, they decided to visit Newport on a trip of pleasure and recreation, and enjoy the sight-seeing of that fashionable watering-place.

Soon after their arrival, the party repaired to the beach on the sea-shore, and resolved on bathing in the surf of the salt water. "Suiting the action to the word," they unrobed themselves in the bathing apartments on the beach, and plunged into the waves of the Atlantic Ocean. While they were thus enjoying themselves to their topmost bent, a party of pickpockets, who had doubtless followed them from Saratoga, leaped over the partitions of the bathing rooms and were soon rifling the pockets of the clothing of their contents, and obtained by their industry nearly $100,000 in money, a check on one of the Cincinnati national banks for $20,000 and one for $3,000, and a note of hand for $3,000, besides a diamond pin valued at $6,000, and several valuable watches, pins, etc.

When our party returned and dressed themselves, their astonishment at the sudden "presto change" of fortune may be better imagined than described. No others besides the parties themselves were to be seen, and, of course, no clue whatever was then to be obtained of the thieves, who were very quickly made rich by dextrous management. The party returned to the hotel and made mention of their loss to the police, but no tidings of the departed treasure could be had. They returned to Cincinnati a day or two since, and the affair was entrusted to detectives to "work up."

On yesterday morning, Chief-of-Police Ruffin received two large envelopes through the postoffice containing the pocket-books, checks, notes, and other paper of less value. These envelopes were postmarked "Boston," and beyond the address on their backs gave no clue whatever by which the thieves could be identified. The thieves seem to be content with their haul of greenbacks, diamond pins, watches, etc., and concluded to be generous, and return the checks, notes, and private papers. It is exceedingly doubtful if ever the money and jewelry are recovered.

The End of Fast Young Frenchmen.

A French paper on their ruined young men, says in 1830, (and how many since!).

Call the roll of the "young men of 1830," and ask where they are! De Balzac is dead—coffee killed him. Frederic Soulie is dead, the victim of coffee and licentiousness. Eugene Briffant died a madman in the Charenton Lunatic Asylum. Grandville went mad, and breathed his last in a private insane house. Lassally died at the Charenton mad house, a raving lunatic. Lowe Weimers died from opium eating and licentiousness. Rabbe, after suffering agony from a loathsome disease, took poison to end his prolonged torture. Alfred de Mustey died a victim to the bottle and the cigar. Count Alfred d'Orsay was killed by a cigar and licentiousness. Charles De Bernard died from coffee and licentiousness. Henri Beyle died from coffee and women. Hippolite Royer Collard died from tobacco and coffee. Gerard de Nerval, after oscillation between plenty and want, abstemiousness and licentiousness, went mad and hung himself. All died of softening of the brain or spinal marrow, or swelling of the heart! All mowed down in the prime of life, in the meridian of their intellect and fame.

Eugene Sue's name is added to the fatal list. Coffee and women were his ruin. He died away from his friends, away from his family, away from the home he had adorned with such elaborate care, an exile in a foreign land. Who would have predicted such an end to Eugene Sue in 1841, when he was the favorite of Paris, rolling in wealth, courted by every one, a dandy of most aristocratic pretensions. Ah! who can read the future?

MR. JOHNSON'S SPEECH.

In reply to the delegation of the Philadelphia Convention, who presented to Mr. Johnson the resolutions of that body, the President addressed them as follows:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE: Language is inadequate to express the emotions and feelings produced by this occasion. Perhaps I could express more by permitting silence to speak, and you to infer what I ought to say. I confess that notwithstanding the experience I have had in public life, and the audiences I have addressed, this occasion and this assemblage are well calculated to, and do overwhelm me. As I have said, I have not language to convey adequately my present feelings and emotions.

In listening to the address which your eloquent and distinguished chairman has just delivered, the proceedings of the Convention as they transpired recurred to my mind. Seemingly I partook of the inspiration that prevailed in the Convention. When I received a dispatch, by two of its distinguished members, conveying in terms the scene which has just been described of South Carolina and Massachusetts arm and arm walking into that vast assemblage, and thus giving evidence that the extremes had come together, and that for the future they were united, as they had been in the past on the preservation of the Union. When the dispatch informed me that in that vast body of men, distinguished for intellect and wisdom, every eye was suffused with tears on beholding the scene, I could not finish reading the dispatch to an associate with me in the office, for my own feelings overcame me. [Cheers.] I think we may justly conclude we are moving under a proper inspiration, and that we need not be mistaken; that the finger of an overruling and unerring Providence is in this matter. [Loud cheers.] The nation is in peril. We have just passed through a mighty, a bloody, a momentous ordeal, yet do not find ourselves free from the difficulties and dangers that at first surrounded us. While our brave men have performed their duties, both officers and men (turning to General Grant, who stood at his right), while they have won laurels imperishable, there are still greater and more important duties to perform, and while we have had their co-operation in the field we now need their support in our efforts to perpetuate peace. [Loud cheers.] So far as the Executive department of the Government is concerned, the effort has been made to restore the Union; to heal the breach; to pour oil into the wounds which were consequent upon the struggle, and, to speak in common phrase, to prepare, as the learned and wise physician would, a plaster healing in character and coextensive with the wound. [Loud cheers.] We thought, and yet think that we had partially succeeded, but as the work progressed, as reconciliation seemed to be taking place, and the country becoming united, we found a disturbing and marring element opposing us. In alluding to that element I shall go no further than did your Convention and the distinguished gentleman who has delivered to me the report of its proceedings. I shall make no reference to it that I do not believe the time and occasion justify. We have witnessed in one department of the Government every effort, as it were, to prevent the restoration of peace and harmony in the Union.

There is on the verge of the Government, as it were a body which assumed to be the Congress of the United States, but, in fact, a Congress of only part of the States. We have seen this Congress assume and pretend to be for the Union, when its every step and act tended to perpetuate disunion, and make a disruption of the States inevitable. Instead of promoting reconciliation and harmony, its legislation has taken the form of retaliation, and this has been the course and policy of one department of your Government.

The humble individual who is now addressing you stands the representative of another department of the Government. The manner in which he was called upon to occupy that position I shall not allude to now; suffice it to say he is here under the Constitution, and being here by virtue of its provisions, he takes his stand upon the character of our liberties as the rampart of civil and religious liberty. [Prolonged cheering.] Having been taught in my early life to hold it sacred, and having practiced upon it during my whole public career, I shall ever continue to reverence that Constitution—the Constitution of the fathers of our country, and to make it my guide. [Enthusiastic cheers.] I know it has been said, and I must be permitted to indulge in the remark that the Executive Department of the Government has been tyrannical. Let me ask this audience of distinguished gentlemen around me here to-day, to point to a vote I ever gave, to a speech I ever made, to a single act of my whole public life, that has not been against tyrranny and despotism.

As to myself, the elements of my nature, the pursuits of my life have not made me either in my feelings or in my practice aggressive. My nature, on the contrary, is rather defensive in its character. But I will say that having taken my stand upon the broad principles of liberty and the Constitution, there is not power enough on earth to drive me from it. [Prolonged cheering.] Having placed myself upon that broad platform, I have not been awed, dismayed or intimidated by either threats or encroachments, but have stood there in conjunction with patriotic spirits, sounding the tocsin of alarm whenever I deemed the citadel of liberty in danger. [Cheers.]

I said on a previous occasion, and repeat now, that all that was necessary in the great struggle against tyranny and despotism was that the struggle should be sufficiently audible for the American people to hear and properly understand. They did hear, and looking on and seeing who the contestants were and what the struggle was about, they determined that they would settle this question on the side of the Constitution and of principle. [Cries of "That's so," and applause.]

I proclaim here to-day, as I have on other occasions, that my faith is abiding in the great mass of the people. In the darkest hour of the struggle, when the clouds seemed to be most lowering, my faith, instead of giving way, looked up through the dark cloud far beyond and saw that all would be safe in the end. [Cheers.]

My countrymen, we all know that, in the language of Thomas Jefferson, tyranny and despotism even can be exercised and exerted more effectually by the many than the one. We have seen a Congress gradually encroach, step by step, upon constitutional rights, and violate day after day and month after month, the fundamental principles of the Government. We have seen a Congress that seemed to forget that there was a Constitution, and that there was a limit to the sphere and scope of legislation. [Renewed cries of "That's so."] We have seen a Congress in a minority assume to exercise powers which, if allowed to be carried out, would result in despotism or monarchy itself. [Cries of "That's so," and enthusiastic cheers given for the President.]

This is truth, and because others as well as myself have seen proper to appeal to the patriotism and republican feeling of the country, we have been denounced in the most severe terms—slander upon slander, vituperation upon vituperation of the most villainous character has made its way through the public press. What, gentlemen, has been your and my sin? What has been the cause of your offending? I will tell you.

Daring to stand by the Constitution of our fathers. [Cheers.]

The President here approached the spot where Senator Johnson was standing and said: "I consider the proceedings of this Convention, sir, as more important than those of any Convention that ever assembled in the United States. [Great applause.] When I look with my mind's eye upon that collection of citizens, coming together voluntarily and sitting in council with ideas, with principles, and views commensurate with all the States, and coextensive with the whole people, and contrast it with the collection of gentlemen who are trying to destroy the country, I regard it as more important than any Convention that has sat, at least, since 1787. [Loud cheers.]

"I think I may say also that the declarations that were there made are equal to the Declaration of Independence itself, and here to-day I pronounce it a second Declaration of Independence. [Cries of 'Glorious,' and most enthusiastic and prolonged applause.] Your address and declarations are nothing more nor less than a reaffirmation of the Constitution of the United States. [Cries of "good," and cheers.] Yes, I will go farther, and say that the declarations you have made, that the principles you have enunciated in your address are a second proclamation of emancipation to the people of the United States. [Renewed applause.] For, in proclaiming and re-proclaiming these great truths you have laid down a constitutional platform upon which all can make common cause and stand together for the restoration of the States and preservation of the Government, without reference to party. The question only is the salvation of the country, for our country rises above all party considerations or influences. [Cries of "good" and cheers.]

How many are in the United States that now require to be free that bear the shackles upon their limbs and are bound as rigidly as though they were in fact in slavery? I repeat, then, that your declaration is the second proclamation to the people of the United States, and offers a common ground upon which all patriots can stand.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen—Let me in this connection ask you who has done more for the advancement of the public welfare than I? I am as much opposed to indulgence of egotism as any one, but here in a conversational manner, while formally receiving the proceedings of this Convention, I may be permitted to ask what have I to gain in human ambition more than I have gained? My race is nearly run. I have been placed in a high office which I occupy under the Constitution, and I may say have held almost every position from the lowest to the highest which a man may attain in your Government. I have passed through every position, from alderman of a village to the Presidency, and surely, gentlemen, this should be enough to satisfy reasonable ambition. If I wanted office, or wished to perpetuate my own power, how easy it would have been to hold and wield that which was placed in my hands by the measures called Freedmen's Bureaus. [Laughter and applause.] With an army, which it placed at my disposal, I could have remained at the capital of the United States, and with its $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 of appropriation at my disposal, with the machinery to be worked by my own hands, with my satraps and dependents in every town and village, and then with the Civil Rights Bill following as auxillary, [laughter,] in connection with all the other appliances of Government, I could have proclaimed myself Dictator. [Cries of "That's true," and "Three cheers for the President."] But, gentlemen, my pride and my ambition have been to occupy that position which retains all power in the hands of the people. [Great cheering.] It is upon that I have always relied; it is upon that I rely now. [A voice, "And the people will not disappoint you."] And I repeat that neither the threats nor jeers of Congress, nor of a calumniating press, can drive me from my purpose. I acknowledge no superior except my God, the author of my existence, and the people of the United States. [Prolonged and enthusiastic cheering.] For the one, I try to obey all his commands as best I can compatible with my poor humanity; for the other, in a political and representative sense the high behests of the people have always been respected and obeyed by me. [Loud cheers.]

Mr. Chairman, I have said more than I intended. For kind allusions to myself contained in your address and resolutions adopted by the Convention, let me remark that in the crisis and at this period of my public life I hold above all price, and shall ever recur with feelings of profound gratification, to the last resolution containing the endorsement of the Convention, emanating spontaneously from the great mass of the people. [Loud cheers.] I hope that my future action may be such that you and the Convention may not regret the assurances you have expressed of me. [Cries of "We are sure of it."] Before parting, my friends, one and all, committee and strangers, please accept my thanks for the kind manifestations, for the regard and respect you have exhibited on this occasion. I repeat I shall always continue to be guided by a firm and conscientious conviction of duty, and that always gives the courage, under the Constitution, which I make my guide.

At the conclusion of the President's remarks, three cheers were enthusiastically given for Andrew Johnson, and three more for General Grant.

The President and General Grant then retired arm in arm, and the committee and audience commenced to disperse.

Moles.

The Cosmos relates an interesting experiment, which proves the service rendered to agriculturists by moles, and the impolicy of destroying these little quadrupeds:

In a commune of the canton of Zurich, the municipal council were lately about to proceed to the selection of a mole catcher, when M. Weber, a distinguished naturalist, laid before the board, the following facts: M. Weber had carefully examined the stomachs of fifteen moles caught in different localities, but failed to discover therein the slightest vestige of plants or roots; whereas they were filled with the remains of ascaris, or earth-worms. M. Weber not satisfied by this fact, shut up several moles in a box containing sods of earth, on which fresh grass was growing, and a smaller case of grubs and earth-worms. In nine days two moles devoured 831 white worms, 193 earth worms, 25 caterpillars, and a mouse, skin and bones, which had been enclosed while alive in the box. M. Weber next gave them raw meat cut up in small pieces, mixed with vegetables; the moles ate the meat and left the plants. He next gave them nothing but vegetables; in 24 hours two moles died of starvation. Another naturalist calculated that two moles destroy 20,000 white worms in a single year.

—A new anecdote of Washington has just come to light. It is of the only man who was not awed by the presence of "Pater Patriae." This man, a Mr. James Byrnes, owned some land which Washington desired to have included in his plan of the federal capitol. Mr. Byrnes flatly refused. Unused to opposition, Washington turned upon him and said, as only he could say it, "Mr. Jacob Byrnes, what would your land have been worth if I had not placed this city on the Potomac?" Byrnes was not crushed, but undismayed, coolly turned to him and said: "George Washington, what would you have been worth if you had not married the widow Custis?"

KINDNESS.—"We once had a very awkward horse to shoe," said a smith, "and I was punishing it severely to make it stand still. My shop was just before the kitchen window, and my wife who is a kind hearted woman, came out and reproved me for my conduct to the animal. She went up to it, patted it, and it stood quiet as a lamb, and we could have done anything with it." Oh, that people would try kindness. It is a mighty cure.

—At New York, last year, nearly $3,000,000 was spent at the various places of amusement. The largest returns from any one establishment were from Barnum's Museum. The Stadt Theatre a German establishment in the Bowery, received nearly $200,000 during the year.

—Capt. William L. Cazneau, formerly one of the most famous of Boston sea captains, recently died at San Francisco, Cal., aged 97. In 1812 he survived one of the most remarkable shipwrecks on record, in which he was over six months on the wreck, and all but two of his crew perished.

—The girls in Michigan are taking decisive measures with the undecided young men. One of them asked a young man when he intended to marry her. The young man said he was not on the marry, and she broke a teapot, filled with boiling water, over his head. She was justified of course.

—A Presbyterian minister in New York, on a recent Sabbath, suddenly disappeared behind his pulpit, while a mysterious smoke, with a strong smell of brimstone, rose in his stead. He was "putting himself out," his vehement demonstrations having ignited some lucifer matches lying loose in his pocket.

—The Plymouth (Ind.) Democrat says: "There is living in a German township, in this county, a woman who is the mother of 16 children, 100 grandchildren, and 57 great-grandchildren—in all one hundred and eighty-two descendants. The mother of this wonderful family is 75 years of age, and in the enjoyment of good health.

—A ten year old cow, said to be three-fourths Short-horn and one-fourth Ayrshire, owned by W. F. Geer, of Painsville, Ohio, in seven days in June last, gave 586 pounds of milk, or a daily average of 83.7 pounds. The greatest quantity given in one day was 91 pounds. The cow had no feed besides good grass. At the time of trial her weight was 1,283 pounds.

—The Davenport Gazette says that Mrs. Mary Ehlers was made a widow for the second time within ten weeks, by the death of her husband, Frederick Ehlers, by cholera. Only five days previous to his death was she married to him after a brief widowhood of only two months, Fred Schroeder, her first husband having then died, leaving her a young widow with a babe a month old.

—The inhabitants of Fulton, Muscatine county, Iowa, were thrown into excitement on Sunday last, by the discovery that a family of seven or eight persons were suffering from the poisonous effects of what they supposed were mushrooms. Dr. Cortis was in attendance during the whole night and it was only by the most energetic treatment that their lives were saved. This should be a caution to mushroom eaters.

—While Mr. Waldron, whose farm is on the railroad west of Rochester, Minnesota, was leading a couple of horses towards his house a few day ago, a train of cars approached, and one of the horses getting loose made for the train, and, trying to jump over the car, fell short and into a ditch. Nothing daunted, he leaped again, but instead of clearing the train, he struck one of the cars and was thrown alongside the track, a used up $250 horse.

—The Portland Press tells the following rather extravagant story to illustrate the wholesale thieving practiced there on the night of the great fire: "One who had been slumbering peacefully in his grave in the Eastern cemetery, awoke, and walking forth inquired if 'the day of judgment had come?' On being told that it was only Portland burning, he remarked that he would go back to his repose. On reaching his grave he found that in his absence somebody had stolen his coffin!"

—A whirlwind swept over a meadow in this vicinity on the 10th, says the Great Barrington Courier, catching up in its course the end of a long winrow of hay, twisting it into a rope so quick as to entwine a negro who was working at the other extremity in its coil, lifting darkey and hay about 100 feet in the air, and deposited them in the next lot, 60 rods away. The man was unhurt, but the hay was so twisted that they chopped it into eight good lengths and took it to the barn in that form.

—Among the novel inventions of the day is one by E. T. Burrows, of Mystic River, Conn., who has patented a lady's garter, consisting of a soft flexible band, which is to be clasped around the lady's leg, next the skin, over which the stocking is to be drawn, and the usual elastic garter placed so as to encircle the stocking directly over the band, and thus all uneasiness occasioned by the elastic binding the leg too tightly is obviated; besides this, the stocking is held up more securely and neatly.

—One day, during the hard winter of '63, a Miss Arnold applied to Gen. Milroy for a permit to forage for her cow, whose milk was the chief support of the family. "Are you loyal?" asked the General. "Yes," she replied. He began to write the permit—"to the United States or Confederate States?" "To the Confederacy, of course," she replied. Then I shall give you no permit. This infamous rebellion must be crushed." "Well," said she, "if you can crush it by starving John Arnold's cow, go it."

—A writer in the Round Table says that Mrs. Henry Wood, the very voluminous novelist, does not trouble herself to find new plots for all her new stories, but, by dint of a little strategy, makes her old ones answer the purpose, by giving them a new name, and elaborating them somewhat. "Lady Adelaide's Oath, now appearing in Temple Bar, was written years ago, and published in Philadelphia, under the title of "The Castle Heir." In St. Martin's Eve, also, she reproduced one of her earlier magazine stories.

—A Chicago officer bought a ticket in a lottery in order to prosecute the concern. The ticket drew a thousand dollar prize, and the officer has concluded to overlook this offense.

—The Pittsburgh Leader says that a case of unusual interest is soon to come up before the courts of that city, in which a married lady charges a dentist with committing an outrage upon her while under the influence of some anæsthetic agent. It is urged for the defence that ladies, when recovered from the influence of chloroform, are apt to imagine that outrages have been commtted on them, and it is the intention of the defendant to have these hallucinations fully investigated, by the introduction of the most competent and scientific testimony, for the benefit of the dental and medical professions.

—The Medina county (Ohio) Enterprise says: "Two large boa constrictors, the property of Stewart Cravens, of Congress, Wayne county, Ohio, escaped from their keepers, in company with three other snakes, a short time since. The boas have not, at last accounts, been captured. An alligator escaped about the same time, taking possession of a field near at hand, driving out the cattle and sheep in a very short space of time. Mr. Craven secured the monster by throwing a lasso over him, and he is now confined in a small compass by a heavy board fence. These reptiles were formerly a part of Dan Rice's menagerie."

Foreign Gossip.

—Auber, at 88, is writing a new opera.

—An advertisement in the London Times informs the world whom it may concern that Joe Pickles will take the name of Macaulay, and that his present name is Joe Pickles Macaulay.

—The Chinese, nine-tenths of whom never saw a steamboat, possess the finest coal in the world for generating steam. It is found near Pekin, the capital, where a coal field exists of no less than three hundred miles in extent.

—Mr. Russell, the London Times correspondent, says that Marshal Benedek fought the battle of Sadowa in the full expectation of a defeat. Two days previous, he sent a dispatch to Francis Joseph worded thus: "Sire, you must make peace."

—The French Minister of War receives, as Minister, $26,000 a year; as Senator, $6,000; as French Marshal, $6,000; as Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor, $600. Total, $38,600. Besides, he is lodged, lighted, and warmed, and his horses are fed, at government expense.

—When a man becomes famous for his forgeries, the Chinese authorities do not incarcerate him in prison, or imprison him in a penitentiary, in order to suppress the evil, but the bankers and wealthy men in the locality make up a purse sufficiently large to buy him off from that crime, and to bind him not to instruct others.

—On the occasion of Queen Victoria's recent journey to and from Balmoral, an experiment was made at every junction on the long line of 600 miles to hold communications, by means of a new electrical apparatus, between the guard and the engine driver, while the train was in motion. The communications were made by her majesty, to whom the mechanism was explained by Lord Charles Fitzroy, and in every case with instant and complete success.

—A lady writes of a costly stud in India: "The first show of the day was Runjeet's private stud. I suppose fifty horses were led past us. The first had on its emerald trappings, necklaces arranged on its neck and between its ears, and in front of the saddle two enormous emeralds, nearly two inches square, carved all over and set in gold frames, like looking-glasses. The crupper was all emeralds, and there were stud ropes of gold put on something like a martingale. Heera Singh said the whole was valued at $1,850,000."

—A letter from Baden contains the following, which illustrates the state of feeling in the lesser German States:—"Last week, 40 students arrived near the Castle of Durbach, near Offenburg, from Friburg, accompanied by a surgeon. They were armed with rapiers, and retired into the interior of a forest, where they selected a suitable spot for fighting duels on a large scale, 20 to 20. They fought for a long time, inflicting wounds on each other in the face and arms. One is said to have had his life endangered. What was the origin of this battle? Politics—20 were for Austria and 20 for Prussia.

—A curious case of kleptomania is reported in Paris. A lady bought half a pound of prepared wool at a shop at 10 francs the pound, but popped a leg of mutton belonging to the shopkeeper into her bag with it. The action was seen by the master, who politely took away the lady's bag, and said, "I think my assistant made a mistake—he has given you too much wool. We will weigh it; indeed, the bag weighs seven pounds, which, at 10 francs the pound, will be 75 francs. Will you take the whole of the wool?" Too glad to fall in with the humor of the shopkeeper, the lady agreed, paid, and departed with her leg of mutton, and the shopkeeper sent the money to the poor of the quarter.

—A foolish wager was made at a wine-shop in Paris, which resulted in death. At a breakfast where the conversation turned on the quantity of drink which a person could take, a bricklayer, named Florentine, made a bet that he could drink twelve glasses of wine while the clock of the Tuileries was striking twelve. He drank three glasses before the clock had struck three times. At the next glass he stopped to breathe. At the seventh he began to drink more slowly, but, making an effort, he drank off the eighth glass. He then turned very pale, and breathed with difficulty. His friends wished to stop the wager, but he said he would go on, come what might, and swallowed the ninth glass. He had hardly emptied the glass when he fell down senseless. A surgeon was sent for, but, in spite of all his efforts, the foolish man died in three hours.

Art and Science.

—Cigar-shaped railroad trains are suggested as a means of decreasing the atmospheric resistance, which is said to much retard the speed of the trains on the present plan.

—A process has been discovered by which India rubber can be bleached to a pure white, and after having been hardened will be used for the manufacture of collars and cuffs.

—Sidney E. Morse, of New York, has just patented a curious philosophical instrument which is called a bathometer. You throw it overboard with its appendages, in the ocean, where the water is miles deep. It goes down like a shot, and as soon as it touches the bottom it turns and comes back to the surface. You pick it up and the true depth of the water where it struck the bottom is seen on the scale of the barometer, just as you see the degree of heat on the scale of a thermometer.

—Colored starch is the latest novelty of the season. It is made in pink, buff, the new mauve, and a delicate green and blue will soon be produced. Any article starched with the new preparation is completely colored—dyed, we should have said, but it washes out, and the garment that was pink to day may be green to-morrow, and buff afterward, but we can hardly say "dyed." It is intended especially for those bright but treacherously colored muslins, that are costly, wash out and perplex their owners.

A DENTIST of our acquaintance says that it is much easier to take the Tartar off a woman's teeth, than off her tongue.

A Remarkable Railroad.

FINDLAY, Ohio, Aug. 10.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—

One's traveling experience is never complete until they have made a trip from Carey to Findlay, over what is known as the Findlay Branch of the Sandusky and Cincinnati Railroad. The distance is sixteen miles, and I doubt if there is another road in the United States that gives a man more riding for his money. It passes through a low, swampy section, and has never been graveled, deep ditches being dug on either side to keep the track from inundation in wet weather. These ditches are always filled with water, and as the train moves slowly along beneath the dense foliage of the overhanging trees, the bull-frogs gaze mildly at us from their cool retreats. They (the frogs) lately had a convention, and resolved, if the road didn't make better time, they would take it, and run it "on their own hook."

The road is laid with the old strap rail, and, in many places where this worn away, they "go it" on the bare timber. No such thing as culvert or cattle-guard is known. This was a source of great inconvenience to the farmers hereabout at one time—not that they ever ran over any, but the cattle would stray away. The "honest yeomanry" stood this awhile, but finally put up their fences the same as though there was no such road as the "Branch" in existence. It was then necessary for a man to go ahead and let down the bars!

There is only one stopping place on the road; and that is at Vanlue. Here we took the side track to let the hand-car pass. Persons get on and off at will, and even women and children appear suddenly in the passenger coach, and disappear again before you know it. The locomotive is an interesting object. I imagine the first one you ever saw. It is really marvelous that she sticks to the track. The engineer is a queer old genius, too, and resembles his engine as much as it is possible for a man to look like a locomotive. And he understands every inch of the road to perfection—the curves, joints, broken iron, etc; in fact, knows just when to jump. He and the engine are much attached to each other. It is said that when he approaches, the old thing, (dog-like) wags her tender (behind,) as a token of recognition.

When the train leaves Findlay, the employees take leave of their families with tears. The parting between the conductor and his wife was peculiarly affecting. Mr. Sprague, of the Crooks House, never allows his guests to leave on this road without first settling up their arrears. There are too many chances against him, and Sprague is fond of a sure thing.—Cor. Cincinnati Commercial.

COL. J. W. BOYDEN, of Chicago, was the Government Agent for paying Pensions at Chicago in 1862, 1863 and 1864. Pensioners remember his uniform courtesy and kindness. We are pleased to know that his influence at the Departments in Washington—his experience, fidelity and promptness—are at the service of Officers, Soldiers and Heirs of our honored dead. Those who have not yet received Arrears of Pay, or Bounty, Commutation of Rations as Prisoners of War, or Increase of Pensions, will do well to preserve his advertisement in our columns, and employ Col. Boyden.

THE GREATEST

DISCOVERY OF THE AGE!

Farmers, Families, and others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr. Tobias' Venetian Liniment for dysentery, colic, croup, chronic rheumatism, sore throat, toothache, sea-sickness, cuts, burns, swellings, bruises, old sores, headache, mosquito bites, pains in the limbs, chest, back, &c. If it does not give relief, the money will be refunded. All that is asked is a trial, and use it according to the directions.

DR. TOBIAS—Dear Sir: I have used your Venetian Liniment in my family for a number of years, and believe it to be the best article for what it is recommended that I have ever used. For sudden attack of the croup it is invaluable. I have no hesitation in recommending it for all the uses it professes to cure. I have sold it for many years, and it gives entire satisfaction. CHAS. H. TRIMMER.

Habitual Constipation.

HOW TO EFFECT A CERTAIN AND PERMANENT CURE.

Some occupations of life predispose to Costiveness, especially those which allow but little exercise. Persons who contract this unfortunate habit of body, under such circumstances, might possibly be relieved by changing their sedentary employments for others of a more active kind; but this is by no means certain. Habitual constipation is a very obstinate disorder. All the ordinary so-called remedies invariably aggravate it. Nothing can be more injurious than the continued use of strong aperients. They at first irritate, and finally almost paralyze the bowels—rendering them so torpid that enormous doses of cathartic medicines have no effect upon them. A mild aperient combined with a gentle stimulant, is the true remedy; and a combination in the happiest proportion, of these ingredients, is found in HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS. This favorite Stomachic invigorates the whole intestinal canal, while quietly removing from its convolutions all impediments to a free passage through them. No ordinary stimulant effects the desired object. Cases of Constipation abandoned as hopeless by distinguished medical men have been cured in a few weeks by the Bitters. To those who have tried all the medicines of the dispensary in vain, we say try this irresistible stimulant and aperient. There is no sufficient reason why constipation should be the consequence of sedentary habits. HOSTETTER'S BITTERS, by supplying the vigor which would otherwise be derived from exercise, will in all cases enable the system to perform its excretionary functions regularly and healthfully.

DR. SWAIN'S VEGETABLE HAIR BALM invariably restores grey hair to its original color, without staining the skin or clothing. It leaves the most dry, dead and crisp hair, soft, moist and glossy, causes it to curl, and keeps it in its place, while it promotes its growth and prevents its falling off.

It contains neither oil or alcohol.

Numerous preparations of oil, alcohol and sulphur have been palmed upon the public, and having totally failed to give satisfaction, the manufacturers have deservedly come to grief.

Dr. Swain warrants his Vegetable Balm to accomplish all that he claims for it, and authorizes his agent to refund the money wherever it fails to give satisfaction.

It is an entirely new and scientific preparation, produced by the distilation of rare and fragrant flowers, which renders it not only the best renewer in the world, but makes it particularly agreeable as a hair dressing to both old and young, while its liquid purity and floral odor are in striking contrast with the nasty mixtures usually sold.

The proprietor has letters from many of the most distinguished as well as fashionable people, judges, clergymen, lawyers, physicians, opera singers, actresses, &c, certifying to the remarkable virtues of the Balm.

Don't let any dealer urge upon you a different article, but if your tradesman does not keep this, send one dollar for a trial bottle to the nearest agent, or the proprietor.

If for grey hair, send for No. 1.
If for hair dressing, send for No. 2.

DR. VELPAU'S FRENCH PILLS.

Ladies, take Particular Notice.

THE REAL VELPAU FEMALE PILL.

[WARRANTED FRENCH.]

THESE PILLS, so celebrated many years ago in Paris for the relief of female irregularities, and afterward so notorious for their criminal employment in the practice of abortion, are now offered for sale for the first time in America. They have been kept in comparative obscurity from the fact that the originator, Dr. Velpau, is a physician in Paris of great wealth and strict conscientious principles, and has withheld them from general use, lest they should be employed for unlawful purposes. In overcoming Female Obstructions, Falling of the Womb, Whites, Green Sickness, Suppression, Retention, or Immoderate Flow of the Monthly Discharges, they seem to be truly omnipotent, bursting open the flood-gates from whatever cause may have stopped them; but they are offered to the public only for legitimate uses, and all agents are forbidden to sell them when it is understood that the object is unlawful. Married ladies should never take them when there is any reason to believe themselves pregnant, for they will be sure to produce a miscarriage.

These pills are entirely safe under all circumstances, being composed entirely of substances from the vegetable kingdom.

Each box has the coat of arms for the City of Paris stamped on the box, with the words "Trade Mark" in French, to counterfeit which is a misdemeanor, and all persons will be dealt with according to law.

☞ Full directions accompany every box.

Ladies can obtain a box sealed from the eyes of the curious, by inclosing One Dollar and six post-office stamps to any respectable druggists, or to O. G. STAPLES, General Agent for the United States, Watertown, N. Y.

The term of three months for which the street sprinkler was engaged expired the last day of August. It has proved such a great convenience however, that our business men have no notion of dispensing with its services so long as the dust renders it necessary. The sprinkler will continue its trips during the month of September at any rate and perhaps longer.

TAKE NOTICE.—All Soldiers and Soldiers heirs, who are entitled to the additional Bounty of $100, and have not yet applied for the same should call upon S. C. Stacy immediately, who will make out their applications and forward them to Washington forthwith.

Lost.—Between Franklin Centre, and Tecumseh, on the night of Aug. 30th a blank order book for Greely's History. The finder will please leave at the P. O. Tecumseh and receive the thanks of the loser.

Married,

In Tecumseh, Sunday August 26th, by Rev. Mr. Burnham, Mr. N. G. SMITH, of Jackson, Mich., to Mrs. RACHEL HUBBARD, of Norwalk, Ohio.

Rev. Mr. Cornelius, of Ann Arbor, preached at the Baptist Church last Sabbath, morning and evening. Mr. Cornelius must be one of the oldest Baptist clergymen in the State. He has presided over the Ann Arbor Society for many years with much ability and with the best success.

He was greeted here with a full house and appreciative audience.

Absence of Mind.

Our Local witnessed an incident an evening or two since peculiarly illustrative of an absent mind. One of our principal business men stepped into Dr. Curtis' Drug Store just before closing time, all the other stores having been previously closed, took a letter from his pocket and addressed it, and started for the Post office. Our Local stepping out a moment after—saw the same gentleman diligently at work endeavoring to get his letter through the door of Anderson & Larneds Store. He made several unsuccessful attempts, and was about giving up in despair, when a loud laugh such as only locals are capable of indulging in brought him to his senses and he discovered that the Post-office was not kept by Anderson & Larned.

The affair gives rise to several reflections:

1st. The time of the departure of the southern mail is very inconvenient since it subjects our business men to the necessity of seeking for the letter box in the door of a Dry Goods establishment at an unreasonable hour of the night. 2d. Such an incident at such a time might be seized upon by the personal enemies of our friend as an illustration of the evils of intemperance. 3d. It is the heighth of folly for any man to be searching for a hole where there is no hole.

A Democratic Convention was held in Adrian last Saturday to select delegates to to the State and Congressional Conventions.

The following Delegates were appointed:

All those desiring first-class life Insurance, should call upon S. C. Stacy and procure a Policy in the "Universal Life Ins. Co" of New York. It is organized on an entirely new plan; its rates are twenty-five per cent lower than any other company on the continent, and its losses are paid within thirty days after the proofs are made out. Call and examine its features before insuring elsewhere.

J. D. Robbins has just received the largest stock of School Books, Wall Paper &c. ever brought to town.

The New Tannery.

The new Tannery situated on the south bank of Evans Creek and east side of Maumee street and owned by O. Emlay & Co., is now completed and will prove not only an ornament to the place, but will be of great substantial benefit. The main building is built of wood, is fifty by sixty-six feet in dimensions and three stories high. The Engine Room is eigteen by twenty-six feet built of stone and with ground floor and slate roof, and is situated at the north-east corner of the main building. This contains a fine stationary Engine of Horace Brewers' manufacture which together with all the appurtenances cost $2150, also a force pump of the most approved pattern, and a large water tank. The force pump is arranged with a connection to the Engine to fill the tank with water for the use of the boiler, and a hose can be attached to the same pump to be used in case of fire. There is also a water pipe extending from the tank to the north of the bark mill which is located in the north-east corner of the main building adjacent to the Engine Room, from which a stream of water constantly flows upon the ground bark whenever the mill is in use. This is a great improvement upon the old plan of arranging bark mills, as one of the most prolific causes of fire in tanneries is from the ground bark. Their mill is one of the best manufactured, and came from the firm of Star, Buck & Brother.

The lower story of the tannery contains the vats and leeches, distributed as follows: In the east end of the building and underneath the mill there are five leeches; the balance of the story contains 30 liquor vats, 3 lime vats, 2 bate vats, 2 soak vats, one junk and one cooler. These are conveniently arranged, and occupy nearly the whole of the lower floor.

The second story is used as the currying shop. It contains four currying tables, and has every facility for carrying on that branch of the business with regularity and dispatch. The third floor is designed mostly for storage. The whole internal arrangement of the tannery is very complete, and as convenient as skill and ingenuity could make it. There will be from eight to ten hands in constant employ, who will turn out about one hundred and twenty hides per week.

Mr. Wm. B. Howland will act as foreman of the establishment than whom there is probably no better tanner in the State, as proof of which we would mention the fact that the leather of Emlay & Co. commands two cents more on the pound to-day than that of any other tannery in Michigan, and it is the intention of the proprietors to maintain the superiority they have now attained. We wish them the best of success in their efforts. We cannot close this article without mentioning that the building was constructed by Messrs. Temple & Murray of this village and that the job was well done throughout

Pick-Pocket Shot.

Our readers will remember an account, which we printed on Friday last, of a case of pocket-picking which took place at Lenawee Junction on Thursday night last, the perperrators of the robbery having escaped.

We gave the particulars on this occasion just as they were given to us, but we have since ascertained that the account was incorrect in several particulars, especially as relates to the amount of money stolen. We were informed there that the sum was $3,000 and, so gave it to our readers. We have since found out that it was but $24, which was in Canada bills. The old gentleman robbed resides, we believe, in Ridgeway, and is named Barrett.

Monday morning as the Jackson freight train was leaving the yard, and was near the shops, a man caught hold of the hind car and, after being dragged for some distance, succeeded in getting on board. He was recognized by Clark Packard, the Conductor of the train, and one or two other persons on the train as the man who committed the robbery at the Junction on Thursday night.

On the train was an officer named Phillips, from Hillsdale, who was in search of a man who had committed a highway robbery in Hillsdale on Saturday, and had subsequently escaped. Conductor Packard gave this officer the details of the robbery, assured him that the man on the train was the perpetrator, and urged him to arrest him, telling also of the dangerous and desperate character of the man.

At first officer Phillips declined to have anything to do with the matter, as he had other business, and did not relish the detention, but on being further urged concluded to attempt the arrest.

On the train stopping at the Junction, the rogue, who had doubtless observed the consultation with the officer, sprang from the car and again attempted to escape by running. But he missed his reckoning this time, and missed also the darkness which served him so good a turn before. The officer started in pursuit, and finding his game was likely to escape him, drew his revolver, and, after having ordered the man to stop twice, to neither of which warnings any attention was paid, he fired. The first shot was effectual, and checked the flight of the pick-pocket, who was then distance about eight rods from his pursuer. The ball took effect in the back on the left side, a short distance from the spine, and passed a distance of eight or nine inches through the flesh, to within about an inch of the surface of the skin in front.

After this gentle reminder the rogue submitted to be arrested, and in charge of the officer came back to the city. He was taken to jail, where his wounds, which are by no means dangerous; were dressed by Dr. Rynd, and the ball extracted.—Adrian Times.

Michigan State Fair.

The Managing Board of the State Fair, which is to be held at Adrian, on the 18th of September, are showing a great liberality and energy in the arrangements, and so far as is known, this annual festival promises to be more than usually attractive. We have before called attention to the enlarged accommodations and the extension of the buildings, to the liberal premiums offered on cattle, horses, sheep, fruit and in all the departments. Measures are now being taken by prominent fruit men and orchardists to exhibit such a show of the best fruit of the State as can nowhere else be seen, and will well repay those engaged in this particular interest for a visit.

The buildins are all completed, and the work of decoration will be pushed forward rapidly during the next two weeks.

The citizens' premiums this year are very liberal and in addition the business committee have made arrangements during the past week to secure that a grand match for $2,000 will be trotted by Dexter and Patchen, on the last day of the fair. As it is generally understood that these horses are to go to Europe soon after they have completed their western tour, this match at the State fair will be the only opportunity that the citizens on the Eastern and Northern portions of the State will have to witness the astonishing powers of these famous specimens of the American trotting horse.

The match will come off on Friday afternoon, Sept. 21st, but during the whole week Patchen and Dexter will be on exhibition at the stables on the fair ground, and it has been agreed that Dexter on one of the days of the days of the fair will give an exhibition of his astonishing powers by trotting a single dash of a mile against a fast running horse.

The citizen's premiums consist of three divisions. On Thursday, the premiums are as follows:

1st race.—For the best horse, mare or gelding that has never trotted in any sporting race, that will trot mile heats, go as they please $100
Second best do. - - - - - - - - 20
Entry fee $20.

2d race.—For the best horse, mare or gelding that will trot mile heats, best three in five $400
Second best do - - - - - - - - - 50
Entry fee $50.

On Friday, the last day of the fair, the citizens' premiums are as follows:

1st race.—Entree $25. For the best running horse, mare or gelding, mile heats, weight per age, - - - - - - - - - - - $125
Second best, - - - - - - - - - - 25

Second race.—Entry $50. For the best running horse, mare or gelding, two mile heats, weight per age, - - - - - - - -$300
Second best - - - - - - - 100

In cattle there is offered a first and second citizens' premium, as follows:

For the best heard of short-horn cattle to consist of not less than five head, of which one shall be a bull - - - - - - - - - $140
Second best do - - - - - - - - - 60

The premiums are open for competition as well as the premiums on the regular list of the Society, to exhibitors from any part of the United States, and also to the breeders of the British Provinces. As they are the largest ever offered for cattle by any Association, there being several herd prises of $100 each, besides the above special citizens' premiums, every inducement is offered to breeders to bring on their stock. These premiums are also open to all who make entries on the regular list, being "free." The herds entered for these citizens' premiums, it is expected, will be shown on the forenoon of Friday, in front of the grand stand, and their merits will be decided upon. Messrs. D. McMillian, of Ohio, the celebrated breeder, and an ex-President of the Ohio State Board of Agriculture, and the well-known short-horn breeder, J. R. Page, of Sennett, N. Y., have accepted invitations to be present and act as judges in this important class, so that we may be sure the entries will be judged on their merits.

On Friday, after the running races, the grand match that has been made between Dexter, the renowned king of the trotting turf, and George M. Patchen, jr., the equally celebrated California trotter, will come off. As this match will be looked for with the greatest interest, and a large attendance is expected, the grand stand has been enlarged, and the accommodations are such as to give every one a fine opportunity.

The Society, in consideration of the large premiums and the great expense it has been at to secure to our citizens the finest display of horses, cattle, sheep, fruit and other productions of the breeders and farmers, have deided to charge for admission at the gates 50 cents for each person. On all other days the entrance will be 25 cents.

For all particulars in relation to the arrangements, application may be made to the Secretary, at his office, at 130 Jefferson avenue, Detroit.

Nervous Headache, Sick Headache, Dyspesia, Constipation of the bowels, Costiveness and Diseases of the Liver, can be cured by the use of Dr. P. N Curtis' Headache and Dyspeptic Pills.—Price 50 cents a box. Every box warranted to give satisfaction or money refunded.

MORTALITY.—There seems to be a great deal of Dysentery and Cholera morbus about just now, and our list of deaths is much larger than we are usually called upon to record. Eating unripe or decayed fruit seems to be the principle cause.

Coe's Dyspepsia Cure will be found an invaluable remedy for all such troubles, and should be kept in the house and immediately used at the first attack. It is also a sovereign cure for dyspepsia, in its worst forms. Those who have tried everything else and failed, will rejoice that an infallible remedy has been found.

The J. Monroe Taylor Gold Medal Soap is just the thing to please the ladies. The maker studies their wants and wishes, and leaves nothing undone which will make a washing day a gala day; and from the sale of it we should think it was fully appreciated by them. The lady who does not enjoy the advantage of its good qualities is deprived of a great luxury in the way of white, nice clothes. Go at once and get a supply.

MY OWN BLUE BLONDE.

They say the dark eyed maids of Spain
Are passionate and fond;
But eyes of blue are tender and true;
Give me my own blue blonde.

An arch coquette is the bright brunette;
Blithe and merry, and gay;
Her love may last till the summer is past,
But my blonde's forever and aye!

If bards of old the truth have told,
The Sirens have raven hair;
But o'er the earth since art had birth,
They paint the Angels fair!

Ah, well!—may be the truth to see
A lover is ever fond;
And I can't deny—nor will I try—
My love is a golden blonde!

SCIENCE AND PRACTICE.

I remember once, in company with a crowd of interested auditors, listening to a justly distinguished pomologist, who, in the course of his peroration in praise of scientific study, suggested the great advantage of analyzing all the different pears, and the different soils under culture, so that they might be minutely adjusted each to each. Of course the worthy old gentleman never did such a thing, and (being a shrewd man) never means to. Yet it seemed not a very bad thing—to say. The lesser pomologists all wagged their heads approvingly, but without any serious thought of following the advice; the embryo chemists fairly gushed over in approval; and the only doubt expressed, was in the faces of certain earnest, honest, old farmers—who had already paid twenty-five dollars for a soil analysis, to the eminent Professor Mapes—and of one or two scientific adepts, who, I thought, give a twirl to their tongues in the left cheek—rather evasively. In general, I find that the most modest opinions in regard to the agricultural aids of applied science, come from men of the most distinguished scientific attainment; and the exaggerated promises and suggestions flow from those who are slightly indoctrinated, and who make up by uproar of words, and aggregation of pretentious claims, for the quiet confidence and fair-sighted moderation of real science. Even so we find a General in command—looking from end to end of the field—modest in his promises, doubtful by reason of his knowledge; while some blatant Colonel, puffy with regimental valor, and knowing the positions only by the confused roar of artillery, will pompously threaten to bag every man of the enemy.

But aside from the exaggeration alluded to—and of which I should reckon so minute a soil analysis as to determine what ground would most favor the development of pectose in a baking pear, and of pectic acid in a Bartlett, a fair sample—there are other hindrances to the effective and profitable co-laboration of scientific men with the practical farmer. The latter has a wall about him of self-confidence, ignorance of technicals, great common sense, and awkward prejudices which the scientific man, with his precision, his fineness of observation, his remote analogies, and his impatience of guess work, is not accustomed or fitted to undermine. He may preach indeed successfully all the old methods, but if the old methodist does not detect, or recognize the breach, what boots it? Science must stoop to the work, and show him a corn crop that is larger and grown more cheaply than his own; this is sending a shot home.

Let me illustrate by a little talk, which I think will have the twang of a realism about it.

A shrewd chemist, devoting himself to the missionary work of building up farming by the aid of his science, pays a parochial visit to one of the backsliders whom he counts most needful of reformation. The backslider—I will call him Nathan—is breaking up a field, and is applying the manure in an unfermented and unctuous state;—the very act of sinning, according to the particular theory of our chemist, perhaps, who urges that manures should be applied only after thorough fermentation.

He approaches our ploughing farmer with a "Good morning."

"Mornin," returns Nathan (who never wastes words in compliment.)

"I see you use your manure unfermented."

"Waal, I d'n'know—guess it's about right; smells pooty good, doan't it?"

"Yes, but don't you lose something in the smell?"

"Waal, d'n'know;—kinder hard to bottle much of a smell, ain't it?"

"But why don't you compost it; pack up your long manure with turf and muck, so that they will absorb the ammonia?"

"The what?—(Gee, Bright!)"

"Ammonia; precisely what makes the guano act so quickly."

Ammony, is it? Waal—guanner has a pooty good smell, tew; my opinion is, that manure ought to have a pooty strong smell, or 'taint good for nuthin.'"

Scientific gentleman a little on the hip; but revives under the pungency of the manure.

"But if you were to incorporate your long manure with turf and other material, you would make the turf good manure, and put all in a better state for plant food."

"Waal—(considering) I've made a compo's afore now;—dooz pooty well for garden sass and such like, but it seems to me kinder like puttin' water to half a glass o' spirits; it makes a drink a plaguey sight stronger'n water, no doubt o'that; but after all's said and dun—'taint so strong as the rum. (Haw, Buck; why don't ye haw!)"

Scientific gentleman wipes his spectacles, but follows after the plow.

"Do you think, neighbor, you're ploughing this sod as deeply as it should be?"

"Waal—(Gee, Bright!)—it's as folks think; I doan't like myself to turn up much o' the yaller; it's a kind o' cold sile."

"Yes, but if you exposed it to the air and light, wouldn't it change its character and so add to the depth of your land?"

"Doant know but it might; but I ha'n't much opinion o' yaller dirt, nowhow; I kinder like to put my corn and pototoes into a good black sile, if I can get it."

"But color is a mere accidental circumstance, and has no relation to the quality of the soil.

("Gee, Bright! gee!")

"There are a great many mineral elements of food lying below, which plants seek after; don't you find your clover roots running down into the yellow soil?"

"Waal, clover's a kind of a tap rooted thing—natural for it to run down; but if it runs down arter the yeller, what's the use o' bringin' on it up?"

The scientific gentleman sees his chance for a dig.

"But if you make the progress of the roots easier by loosening the sub-soil, or incorporating a portion of it with the upper soil, you increase the facilities for growth, and enlarge your crops."

"Waal, that's kinder rash'nal; and ef I could find a man that would undertake to do a little of the stirrin' of the yaller, without bringin' much on't up, and bord himself, I'd furnish half the the team and let him go ahead."

"But wouldn't the increased product pay for all the additional labor?"

"Doan't b'lieve it would nohow, between you and I. You see, you gentlemen with your pockets full o' money (scientific gentleman coughs—slightly), talk about diggin' there, and turnin' up the yaller, and making compo's, but all that takes a thunderin' sight o' work. (Gee, Bright!—g'lang, Buck!)"

The scientific gentleman wipes his spectacles, and tries a new entering wedge.

"How do you feed your cattle, neighbor?"

"Waal, good English hay; now and then a bite o' oats, 'cordin' as the work is."

"But do you make no beeves?"

"Heh?"

"Do you fatten no cattle?"

"Yaas, long in the fall o' the year I put up four or five head, abut the time turnips are comin' in."

"And have you ever paid any attention to their food with reference to its fat-producing qualities, or its albuminoids?"

("Gee, Bright!)—bumy—what?"

"Albuminoids—name given to flesh producers, in distinction from oily food."

"Oh, never used 'em. Much of a feed? (G'lang, Buck!)"

"They are constituent parts of a good many varieties of food; but they go only to make muscle; it isn't desirable you know, to lay on too much fatty matter."

"Heh?—keep off the fat do they? (Gee, Bright!) Dum poor feed, then, in my opinion."

By this time the end of the furrow is reached, and the scientific gentleman walks pensively toward the fence, while Nathan's dog that has been sleeping under a tree, wakes up, and sniffs sharply at the bottom of the stranger's pantaloons.

I have written thus much in this vein, to show the defensible position of many of the old style farmers, crusted over with their prejudices—many of them well based, it must be admitted—and armed with an inextinguishable shrewdness. The only way to prick through the rind is to show them a big crop grown at small cost, and an orderly and profitable method, gradually outranking their slatternly husbandry. Nor can I omit to say in this connection, that the free interchange of questions and answers, and unstarched companionship, which belonged to the New Haven Agricultural Convention of 1860, are among the best means of breaking down the walls of demarcation, and establishing chemical affinities between Science and Practice.—My Farm of Edgewood.

New Process of Making Steel.

M. Galy-Cazalat has discovered a new process for the rapid conversion of cast iron into homogeneous and pure cast steel. It is known that pieces of steel cast in moulds are full of cavities, considerably weakening their tenacity. The rolling or hammering required to cause an adherence of the particles of the metal is very costly, and sometimes impracticable. It occurred to M. Galy Cazalat to cause these cavities to disappear by submitting heavy guns to great pressures produced by gasses, while the metal is still in a fluid state, in the moulds of sand, firmly bound by strong frames of iron of suitable resistance. For this purpose, immediately after the casting of the complete cannon, the whole is covered hermetically by a metallic cap, screwed firmly to the framework of the mould. This cap carries a vertical tube, furnished with a cock at the lower extremity, and closed at top by a less resisting membrane, or safety diaphragm. It contains six to ten grammes of powder, without sulphur, composed of eighty parts of saltpetre and twenty parts of charcoal. The imprisoned gasses under the cap exert on the surface of the liquid steel a pressure, which is transmitted simultaneously and regularly through the entire mass of the cannon, effectually effacing the bubbles, and increasing the tenacity of the metal, which is the same throughout.

By this process he succeeds in avoiding many of the difficulties incident to his own and to Bessemer's method of making cast steel, one of which was, that the steel produced by them had to be recast so as to become homogeneous and of superior quality, which second operation, carried on in crucibles containing 44 pounds, doubled the cost of homogeneous cast steel.

Sydney Smith's Common Sense.—Never give way to melancholy; resist it steadily, for the habit will encroach. I once gave a lady two-and-twenty receipts against melancholy. One was a bright fire; another to remember all the pleasant things said to and of her; another to keep a box of sugar plums on the chimney piece, and a kettle simmering on the hob.

Never teach false morality. How exquisitely absurd to tell girls that beauty is of no value—dress of no use! Beauty is of value; her whole prospects and happiness in life may often depend on a new gown or a becoming bonnet, and if she has five grains of common sense, she will find this out. The great thing is to teach her their just value, and that there must be something better under the bonnet than a pretty face for real happiness. But never sacrifice truth.

I am convinced digestion is the great secret of life; and that character, talents, virtues and qualities are powerfully affected by beef, mutten, piecrust and rich soups. I have often thought I could feed or starve men into many virtues and vices, and affect them more powerfully with the instruments of cookery than Timotheus could do formerly with his lyre.

Tenacity of Life in Eels.—It is well known that eels, after being beheaded and skinned, and having their entrails taken out, will often wriggle and move considerable. What is the philosophy of this; are they alive, or is it the involuntary action of the nerves and muscles?

The lower order of animals, such as the snake, the eel, and turtle, have but little brain, and their sensations, and the governing forces of their bodies, are distributed in ganglia or nervous knots, over a considerable extent of the system; while in man the motive force is located in the brain. When a man has his head severed or disconnected from the body, his dying struggles are comparatively short. It is said a turtle will live a day or two with the head off.

A Valuable Wife.—Mr. Slipton had been married just four weeks, when, one morning, he found that all of his shirts, but one, had been worn by him. While putting on his last clean garment, he had some peculiar thoughts, there not being the slightest indication that his wife intended to superintend the washing. After making the fire he rattled the furniture to make a noise on purpose to arouse his easy wife. She immediately peeped over the blankets, and then exclaimed,

"My dear, what are you doing?"

He deliberately responded,

"I've put on my last clean shirt, and I am going to wash one now for myself."

"Very well," replied Mrs. Easy, "you had better wash one for me, too."

The Highwayman of Utah.—Let it go upon the record that day before yesterday, the fifth day of August, 1866, in the Tabernacle in this city, Brigham Young said:

"I have lots, and plenty of them, but none more than I want, and if any man jumps any of them, I will send him to hell, so help me God."

Some of the lots above referred to include vacant land which the Government owns and is keeping for the use of its citizens. Those citizens are every day arriving in this Territory, and under the laws of the country they will occupy vacant Government land, as they may need it, and if any one is "sent to hell," it will be known who did the deed.—Salt Lake Vidette, Aug. 7th.

A Debt of Honor.—In the great Foxs frolicsome days, a tradesman, who held a bill for two hundred pounds, called for payment. Fox said he could not then pay him

"How can that be?" said the creditor; you have now lying before you bank notes to a large amount."

"These," replied Fox, are for paying debts of honor."

The tradesman immediately threw the bill into the fire. "Now, sir," said he, "mine is a debt of honor which I can't oblige you to pay."

Fox immediately settled.

Art and Science.

Truvaine made a mirror of eleven feet focus. It melted steel in five minutes and silver coin in a few seconds.

When water is boiled under oil and the steam collected and condensed a bubble of gas remains, which is found to be nitrogen, proving the absorptive power of water upon gases.

Powell is engaged in giving the finishing touch to the life-size portrait of Gen. G. B. McClellan, which is to be placed in the governor's rooms of the New York city hall, when finished.

Aniline.—It requires as many as 2,000 tons of coal to produce a circular block of aniline twenty-four inches high by nine inches wide, but this is sufficient to dye three hundred miles of silk fabric.

A Viennese philosopher is experimenting upon the transportation of ponderable bodies by electricity, so that the old fable of the soldier who sent his shoes home for exchange by hanging them on the telegraph wire, may be realized.

Ivory when cut in slices of a thickness of one-twentieth of an inch, becomes transparent in liquid phosphoric acid of a specific gravity of 1.131. The ivory is washed, after the immersion, in clean water, and dried with a linen cloth.

It has lately been discovered that the whole of the sulphur, used at present in illuminating gas (and which makes that gas so offensive) may be removed by bringing it in contact with the ammonical liquor which is an almost worthless product of the same gas works.

If a tube connected with water, and a solid rod also connected with water, be applied at once to the ears, sound will be heard only in the ear supplied with the tube. The reason is that the tube is so much the better conductor that it kills whatever sound is transmitted through the rod.

Sleepers made of mahogany are almost indestructible to the attack of the white ant and seaworm. An engagement has just been entered into to deliver on board a ship at Freemantle, Australia, 600 loads of such sleepers, for an Indian railway, at £3 13s. 6d. per load.

How to Melt Steel with an ordinary Fire.—First heat a piece of steel red hot, in the fire; then take it up with a pair of pincers, and in the other hand hold a stick of sulphur, which you apply to the steel. As soon as they touch each other, the steel will flow as if it were a liquid.

An error in placing a fine dot which fixes the length of a base line in Astronomical measurements, amounting to 1-5000th part of an inch, will amount to an error of seventy-six feet in calculating the diameter of the earth, 360 miles in the sun's distance, and 65,800,000 in the distance of the nearest fixed star.

Some ova or eggs are so small as to be wholly indistinguishable by the eye, but M. Geoffry de St. Ailaire, in 1854 exhibited to the French Academy some eggs of a bird which formerly lived in Madagascar. The largest of these was over one foot long, and nearly as wide. The egg would hold 17½ pints.

Chinese Engineering.—We have no hydraulic construction as great as the Chinese canal; no fortification as great as the Chinese wall; we have no artesian wells that at all approach in depth some of theirs. We have not yet resorted to the practice of obtaining coal from the interior of the earth; they have borings for that purpose more than 3,000 feet deep.

A Great deal has been said and written about what is called "trick" in art. Yet it seems to be of little consequence by what means a painter produces his effects, so long as he does produce them. It is said that Ansdell obtains the peculiar crispness of the plumage of ducks and other birds, by the application of a piece of poplin while the paint is still wet.

Spiders and the Telegraph.—It has been found that one great difficulty to be met with in telegraphy, arises from the webs of spiders, which, when extending in great numbers from the wires to trees or the ground, and being wet with heavy fogs or gentle rains, become so good conductors as to seriously impair insulation. Who can overcome the mighty obstacle imposed by a spider's web to the progress of the telegraph!

Photography in colors has progressed so far that a doll dressed by the operator can be perfectly reproduced on the plates. A greater triumph is in photographing a peacock's feather. It has been found that none but pure colors take well, and those that are made by a mixture of two primary colors give but one of the primaries on the plate. These photographs will not stand a full light long, as they turn brown, but may be preserved in an album.

Preserving Grain.—A new system of preserving grain has recently been adopted in France. The grain, flour, biscuit, etc., is placed in a large iron cylinder, from which the air is subsequently so much exhausted as to render it so rarified as to destroy even the weevill, the most difficult of all corn parasites to destroy. During a six months' trial none were developed. The apparatus is considered available for any length of time, and under the most unfavorable circumstances.

In Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, there are 31 foundries. In the first class establishments from 25 to 40 tons of metal can be used in a single casting. They employ an average of 50 hands. Twelve hands is the average of the second class foundries. The present rate of wages is from $2 to $4.50, according to the character of the work. Piece work is done only in stove foundries. The metal costs an average of $50 per ton—the extremes being $40 and $68—last year it was from $50 to $75.

The Eolian Harp is a very simple instrument, easily constructed, and produces very pleasant music. To make one, take two strands of strong sewing silk, well waxed, a single and double twist, fastened to four pegs, one inch high, on an inch board as long as the width of your window. At one end the pins should have a thumblet similar to a violin pin, to enable you to draw it taut. Place it in a window, the sash resting on the pins, and when the wind blows you have such sounds as the angels love. One string will produce several notes, changing as the wind is gentle or forcible.

A new plan of extinguishing fires has been invented in New York, which consists in a series of iron pipes, perforated with holes, which can be placed beneath the beams of every story in a building, and when so placed, the water can be ejected through them by means of a pipe leading to the engines in the street, and each story receives a continuous shower bath of water. The advantages of this are that it keeps the fire under control and saves the necessity of opening the building. It also preserves the floors and renders it safe for the firemen to enter when the fire is well under way. Its simplicity and cheapness are not the least of its excellencies.

Many years ago Faraday observed that light was transmitted through thin sheets of platinum, palladium and collodium, gold, silver, copper, lead, tin, iron and aluminium. Recently Tasicke sought to determine the secret velocity with which light travels through metals, and found that it travels faster through gold and silver than through a vacuum; but none of these facts was so surprising as those afterwards shown by Deville, that both platinum and thick wrought iron tubes are often carried to a high temperature easily permeable to gases. So remarkable was the permeability of iron at a high temperature, that an iron tube filled with hydrogen gas before the experiment, was found at the end of two hours to hold only a trace of it.

SUMMARY OF THE WEEK.

General Intelligence.

Emma, Queen of the Sandwich Islands, is about to depart for home, having received intelligence of the death of her mother.

The President has accepted an invitation to be present at the laying of the corner-stone of the soldiers' monument at Peoria, Illinois.

Secretary Harlan has retired from his office of Secretary of the Interior, and Hon. O. H. Browning has assumed the duties of that position.

Suit has been brought against Secretary Stanton for imprisonment by military commission and several more such suits are contemplated.

It has been decided that an officer whose discharge is dated prior to April 9, 1865, though not received until after that time, is not entitled to the three months' pay proper granted by the act of Congress of March 8, 1865.

Grave charges are made against Hon. O. H. Browning, Secretary of the Interior. It is asserted that he accepted a $10,000 bribe to use his influence with the President to secure the commutation of the sentences of three murderers.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office has decided that parties who have made entry under the 8th section of the homestead act of 1862, on the condition of five years continuous settlement, have a right, at any time before the expiration of that period, to make proof of such settlement up to a given day, and then pay for the tract at $1.25 per acre, and at once get a title. When a tract of more than 160 acres is taken, the settler is required to pay for the excess in cash, and, should he desire to change his homestead to a cash purchase, he is credited with the amount of such excess, and only required to pay for 160 acres. In case a party abandons his tract, he forfeits all claim to the fees, &c., which were paid at the time of entry at the local land office.

The immense revenues which are pouring into the public treasury make it possible, if it were desirable, to pay the whole of the debt in ten years, after reducing the interest bearing debt to $2,000,050,000 at the close of the present fiscal year. And it requires no extravagant progression of domestic industry and foreign commerce to make the tax an easy one for the Government, should the popular sentiment, North and South, prefer to be rid of direct taxation altogether within this brief period by paying off the debt at the rate of $200,000,000 a year to having the system prolonged, even in a modified shape, to twenty years. The Secretary of the Treasury paid off $124,000,000 last year, besides paying off the army and navy after the close of the war. His gross revenues were $558,000,000. They will not be much, if at all, short of $500,000,000 this year, with the army and navy on the peace establishment, no unpaid requisitions against the Department.

The Presidential party on their tour west, left Washington August 28th, under charge of Gen. McCallum, and Major S. G. Koontz, who were detailed by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company to go with the train all through. The following is a list of excursionists: The President; Secretary of State; Secretary of the Navy, and son, Edgar T. Welles; The Postmaster General; General Grant, and Chief of Staff, General Rawlins; Admiral Farragut, with Lieutenant McGinley, his Secretary; Rear Admiral Radford; Surgeon General Barnes; Minister Romero; Senator Patterson, and wife, and others. The excursionists were received at Baltimore with warm demonstrations. The train left at 10.20 A. M., arriving at Havre de Grace at 11.45 A. M., and at Philadelphia, at 2.13 P. M., where the President made a speech to a large crowd. In the evening, he was serenaded. Arriving in New York on the 29th, the party was met by a committee of the Common Council, and escorted by a division of cavalry up Broadway to the city hall, where Mayor Hoffman delivered an address of welcome. The President replied in a brief speech, and after he had concluded, Secretary Seward was called out and also spoke briefly. From the city hall, the party proceeded to the Fifth Avenue hotel, and on the 30th, were to proceed by steamer to West Point and Albany.

Foreign News.

Mazzini will not accept the terms of King Victor Emanuel's amnesty to exiles, preferring exile to being the subject of Victor.

The Empress Carlotta will not return to Mexico, and it is conceded on all hands that the Empire in that country is fast approaching an end.

A heavy telegram, via the Atlantic cable, from the Mexican Empress Charlotte to Maximillian, passed through the Louisville office Monday night.

A dispatch by the Atlantic cable states that the King of Prussia has ratified the treaty of peace between Prussia and Austria, and that the Spaniards have captured a Chilian privateer.

The Canadian militia are greatly dissatisfied at their non-payment by the provincial government. Ten thousand troops are reported to be all ready to embark from England for Canada.

Dispatches by the Atlantic Cable bring advices from Berlin up to yesterday, and confirm the signing of the treaty of peace at Prague on the 23d. The King of Prussia had received a deputation from the Chamber of Deputies, and made them a little speech. The American naval officers had arrived at Moscow, and were treated with distinguished consideration.

By the Atlantic cable we are informed that Italy demands the return of the relics taken from Venice by the Austrians. The Polish insurrection in Siberia is still progressing. The treaty of peace has been ratified by the King of Prussia. Mazzini refuses to accept the amnesty tendered him by Victor Emanuel. The Italian army is being disbanded. Austria is to issue bonds to meet her war expenses. At the prospect of the speedy downfall of Maximilian's Empire, Spain is anxious about the fate of Cuba.

Advices by the Atlantic cable up to the evening of the 31st state that the treaties of peace have all been ratified. A dispatch from London states that a rise in rebel bonds was occasioned by the news of the Philadelphia Convention. Affairs on the continent are assuming a peaceful aspect, and hostile troops are evacuating the countries they have invaded. The Empress Carlotta has visited Vincenza, and was officially received at Padua by Victor Emanuel. The negotiations reported between the King and the Pope are denied. The war in Candia continues. Later dispatches report the progress of the American embassy through Russia. Another banquet had been given them at St. Petersburg. Francis Joseph, of Austria, has, for reasons of economy, dismissed a portion of his retinue.

The South.

The City Council of Nashville has extended an invitation to the President to visit that city.

The New Orleans Picayune states that the army worm is ravaging some of the richest counties of Alabama.

Excitement reigns in Nashville, and threats of assassination are being made against Gov. Brownlow.

Hon. O. M. Roberts, President of the Texas secession convention of 1861, has been chosen United States Senator from that State.

A Richmond correspondent of the New York Herald states that the body which was exhumed and again buried as being that of Col. Dahlgren, was the body of some other person. Col. Dahlgren's body was never recovered.

In exhuming the bodies interred in the new graveyard at Mobile, a short time ago, one of the coffins broke, and revealed the remains of a Federal soldier perfectly petrified, and looking as natural as life. What was further remarkable, he had not been buried upward of nine months. The ground where he had been buried is low, and damp most of the year.

A Johnson ratification meeting was held in Memphis on the 25th, and attended by about one thousand persons. General Forrest presided. He said there was no decision in the late war, and he proposed now to go to the ballot box. The fighting accomplished nothing, and he wanted no more of it. He endorsed the Philadelphia Convention as a whole. General Stoneman took a seat beside Forrest. Resolutions declaring Congress a usurping rump were loudly cheered.

A letter from Captain Bingham, from Texas, says: "We in Texas are on the eve of another war, which will be much more desperate than the one out of which we have just emerged. The former leaders in the rebellion are more hostile and rabid than they were during the war, or before the State seceded. Unless troops are kept in the most important towns, there will not be a Union man left in Texas in six months. The disloyal from other States are coming in more or less every day, and thousands are returning from Mexico, who went off with Sterling Price and Shelby, and a more desperate set never infested any country. Murders are an every day occurrence. The civil law is denied and trampled upon. The freedmen are held, in many parts of the State, in as strict bondage as before the war, and Union men dare not speak their sentiments openly. Secret societies called the Knights of the Golden Circle, are organized all over the State, and unless the State is held under strict military rule we will have another outbreak in less than six months."

The West.

The Pacific railroad is now running 40 miles west of Fort Kearney.

Gen. Sickles declines to give in his adhesion to the Cleveland soldiers and sailors convention.

Mariposa, California, has been destroyed by fire. Only half a dozen houses were left standing.

Kansas is excited with reports of Indian outrages on her western border. The Governor of that State calls for help.

A grand celebration was had at Des Moines on the 29th inst. in honor of the completion of the Des Moines Valley Railroad to Des Moines.

A fire in Chicago on the 27th, consumed eighteen wooden buildings, injured a dozen more, rendered twenty families homeless, and destroyed $80,000 worth of property.

The Sandusky Register says Captain Fordham of that city has contracted to build two propellers and a lumber vessel, this fall and winter, at a cost of $90,000.

Hon. Peter Melendy, President of the Iowa Central Railroad Company, and United States Marshal of Iowa, has just been removed from the last mentioned office by the Administration on political grounds.

The Muscatine Journal states that the authorities of that city are seriously considering the propriety of interdicting the sale of watermelons. The streets are so covered with the rinds that it is feared that a pestilence may be engendered.

Governor Crawford telegraphs intelligence to Leavenworth of the actual commencement of Indian hostilities at the forks of the Solomon river. The settlers have been attacked and driven back. Seven whites were killed and scalped.

Great preparations are being made in Chicago for the Douglas Monument celebration, on the 6th of September, at which time the President, with many of his cabinet, and Gen. Grant and staff are to be present. The railroads carry passengers to and from at reduced rates.

The mystery of the great Iowa snake is at last explained. He escaped from one of "Yankee" Robinson's side shows. But the Yank says either his snakeship has grown wonderfully fast, or those frightened Iowans look through lenses of immense magnifying powers.

Factories are multiplying in Illinois. A woolen mill to employ from 150 to 200 operatives is in course of erection in Warsaw, by a stock company having $200,000 capital. A company is in process of organization in Dixon for the manufacture of files with $100,000 capital; and an extensive flax manufacturing company in Boston will soon erect a branch factory at Sycamore.

The Cincinnati Gazette announces that, owing to the general stagnation of business, the subscription to aid in the erection of the new Opera House in Cincinnati has not met with the encouragement the manager expected. Mr. Handy, endorsed by some of the most responsible citizens, has therefore concluded to dispose of the remaining tickets by awarding prizes on the plan of the Chicago Art Association.

The Chicago Republican of the 28th, makes the following extraordinary announcement: "The Atlantic cable brings us European dates down to midnight, last night. A monster Reform meeting was held in Birmingham, England, and was addressed by John Bright. A platform was adopted, declaring for 'residential suffrage,' etc. This news was in our office before midnight."

The cholera in St. Louis is said to be decreasing, and the daily reports during the week ending the 25th, showed about thirty deaths a day. The weekly report of the cemeteries, however, shows a great excess over this number, 918 cholera interments having been made during the same week, four cemeteries failing to report. The total estimate for the week is 1,300.

A suit has been intsituted by Mr. A. J. Reynolds, of Sturgis, Michigan, against the Western Union Telegraph Company, for detaining a prepaid death message three days at the St. Louis office. Mr. R. claims that he called twice a day during the time for the message, at the Planter's House, to which it was addressed, and that by the delay he was prevented from seeing his son either alive or dead. He fixes damages at $10,000.

Major General Terry intends to start on the 8th of September next to make a reconoissance of the new department he is to command. His department includes Minnesota, the eastern part of Dakota, and a part of Montana, his headquarters being at Fort Snelling, near St. Paul Minnesota. Between Forts Rice and Snelling he will establish military posts for the protection of a contemplated wagon road which General Sherman is anxious to push through to Montana.

The East.

Fred. Douglass has been appointed Delegate to the Southern Radical Convention, from Rochester, New York.

A New York dispatch states that the President has come to the irrevocable decision that Mr. Stanton must leave the Cabinet.

The United States sloop of war Manitou, said to be a perfect model of nautical beauty, was launched from the Charlestown (Mass.) Navy Yard on Saturday last.

A great conservative meeting, called to ratify the action of the Philadelphia convention, was held in Faneuil hall, Boston, on the evening of the 27th. The hall was crowded.

The delegates to the Labor Congress recently held in Baltimore, had an interview with the President on the 25th. Mr. Johnson expressed his sympathy with the object of their gathering.

Chilian agents in New York city are trying to buy the steam ram Dunderberg. Mr. Webb, the builder, offers it is said, to sell her for $3,500,000 delivered at Valparaiso, or for $2,500,000 taken at New York.

An attack was made on a negro camp meeting near Baltimore, on Thursday night, by a party of men whose names are unknown. Pistol shots were fired, and a white preacher was hit in the head. The meeting was broken up.

Professor Newton of Yale College finds that a prodigious flight of meteors, the most imposing of its kind, will make its appearance, probably for the last time in this century, on the morning of the 13th or 14th of November next. Only thirteen of these showers are recorded between the years 903 and 1833.

Two distinguished men died on Sunday night, the 26th. Rev. John Pierpont, poet and preacher, departed this life at his residence in Medford, Massachusetts, at the ripe age of 81 years; and Dean Richmond, President of the New York Central Railroad, also a prominent Democratic politician of that State, in New York city. The New York World states that the illness of the latter was caused by his unsparing labors to accomplish the success of the Philadelphia Convention.

It appears that Santa Anna came to this country as the victim of a cruel hoax. His private Secretary gave him a letter at St. Thomas, purporting to be from Secretary Seward, urging him to come immediately to the United States. He then purchased the steamship Georgia in which to convey himself and his suite to New York. On arriving in this country he ascertained that the Seward letter was a forgery of the private Secretary, and the great Mexican was the victim of a hoax, which cost him $70,000. An order has been granted by a New York Judge, for the arrest of the deceitful private Secretary.

A train with eight loads of petroleum, on the Erie road, was collided with on the 26th, near Narrowsburg, New Jersey. Several cars were smashed, and the petroleum caught fire, and exploded and burned the whole train. Three dwellings, a wagon shop, a carpenter shop, a hide house, and 50,000 feet of lumber caught fire from the burning oil, and were entirely destroyed. A Mr. Williams, while endeavoring to rescue his two children from one of the houses, dropped one, and while attempting to rescue it, all three were fatally burned. The two children died, and he is not expected to recover. Mrs. Williams, his wife, jumped from a second story window, and immediately gave birth to a child. She is not expected to live. The conductor of the train was badly burned. The loss of property is about $80,000.

CROSBY OPERA HOUSE ART ASSOCIATION.

Malicious Attack Frustrated.

CARD FROM MR. CROSBY.

Sundry evil minded and slanderous individuals connected with exploded "Gift Concert" swindles, with the spiteful purpose of defeating its success, having attempted to put in circulation rumors intended to impair public confidence in the integrity of the management of this great enterprise, Mr. Crosby has deemed it proper to publish the subjoined card and guarantee, which cannot fail to allay any doubts (if such have arisen) in unprejudiced minds. Mr. Nickerson is one of the wealthiest capitalists of Chicago; a gentleman whose financial ability and reputation for honor and probity stands on a sure and unshaken foundation. His guarantee and the expression of confidence on the part of the committee appointed to superintend the drawing are entirely superfluous with those who are acquainted with Mr. Crosby, but they will serve perhaps to strengthen the feeling abroad in the honesty and fair dealing which has thus far marked the conduct of this stupendous Art scheme, and will continue to characterize its management up to the moment of its final success.

We take the following from the Chicago Journal of August 23d:

Crosby Art Association.—As will be seen by the following certificates, the success of the enterprise of the Crosby Art Association is guaranteed beyond a doubt. The fact of Samuel M. Nickerson, Esq., having become responsible in a pecuniary point of view for the distribution of the premiums announced or the refunding of the money paid by subscribers, and being himself indorsed by a number of wealthy and influential citizens, leaves no room for doubt that, with Mr. Crosby's known ability in managing such an undertaking, the enterprise will be brought to a successful consummation:

To the Members of the Crosby Opera House Art Association:

The sale of certificates in the Association has already been so great as to enable me to state that the distribution of premiums heretofore announced will be made to their satisfaction or the money refunded.

U. H. Crosby, Actuary A. A.

Having the utmost confidence in the ability of Mr. Crosby to carry out his enterprise, I hereby guarantee his undertaking as above announced.

Samuel M. Nickerson.

Chicago, August 21, 1866.

The undersigned, members of the committee appointed to superintend the awarding of premiums to members of the Crosby Opera House Art Association, take pleasure in stating that we have full confidence in the integrity of Mr. Crosby and in the responsibility of Samuel M. Nickerson, Esq., his guarantor, and assure the public that we believe the above proposal will be carried out in good faith.

Railroads in India.

The following statement of the Government Director to the Secretary of State for India will be read with interest, as showing the rapid progress of railroad construction in all parts of the Indian empire:

The length of the open line has been increased during the year ending May 1, 1866, from 2,943¼ to 3,331¼. The increase thus shown is distributed as follows: The Great Indian Peninsula, 116 miles; the Madras, 40 miles; the East Indian, 24¼ miles; and the Punjab, 208 miles; making a total of 388½ miles.

The following table shows the length of each line already open for traffic, and the extent remaining to complete them:

Titles of the lines.	Miles of Road— Sanc'd.	Open.	Progr.
East Indian Main Line	1,260¼	1,129¼	147

Of the 3,331¼ miles open, only 250 miles have a second track. It has already, however, been found necessary, in consequence of the unexpected development of traffic, to take measures for the doubling of a greater extent, and a still further increase of a double system is in contemplation.

The foregoing lines have been constructed under the guaranteed system. The undertakings which were not started under the guaranteed system are the Indian Branch Railway and the Indian Tramway. The Branch Company have opened a line from Nulhatee, on the East Indian, to Moorshedabad, 27 miles, and are now building a line from Cawnpore to Lucknow. The expenditures on the two lines will amount to about £400,000. The Indian Tramway Company have opened a line in the Madras Presidency from Arconum to Conjeveram, nineteen miles, at a cost of £4,000 per mile. Neither of these are more than local importance.

The total expenditure on the lines open and in course of construction to May 1st amounted to £60,645,000, of which expenditure £22,000,000 was made in England, £38,645,000 in India. The amount raised to the same date was £60,860,000, of which £47,980,000 is in share capital, and £12,880,000 in debentures.

Power of Imagination.—A wealthy lady had a tickling in her throat and thought a bristle of her tooth brush had gone down and lodged in her gullet. Her throat daily grew worse. It was badly inflamed and she sent for the family doctor. He examined it carefully, and assured her that nothing was the matter—it was a mere nervous delusion, he said. Still her throat troubled her and she became so much alarmed that she was sure she would die. A friend suggested that she should call in Dr. Jones, a young man just commencing practice. She did not at first like the the idea, but finally consented, and Dr. Jones was called. He was a person of good address and polite manners. He looked carefully at her throat and asked several questions as to the sensation at the seat of the malady and finally announced that he could relieve her in a short time.

On his second visit he brought with him a delicate pair of forceps, in the teeth of which he had inserted a bristle taken from an ordinary tooth brush. The rest can be imagined. The lady threw back her head; the forceps were carefully introduced into her mouth; a pick, a loud scream, and 'twas all over; the young physician with a smiling face was holding it up to the light and BEN BUTLER largely fills the public eye just now, in consideration that he is to be nominated for Congress in Mr. Alley's (Essex) District where he has "squatted" by building a house at Gloucester. Ben historically resides at Lowell, but that is in Boutwell's District, and Boutwell was not to be disturbed. He might have moved his Lowell house a few rods and been in Banks' District, as some wag suggested he should do last year when Banks was a candidate, but the experience of last year has dissuaded anybody from the attempt to unseat the ex-Speaker, and accordingly Ben has pitched his tent on the rocky coast of Massachusetts Bay, with a convenient Alley open to him for Congress.

A NEW YORK letter says: "Yesterday I met with a man whose name has been before the public, and notoriously. He once possessed a noble intellect; but, alas! he is now but a remove from a brute. I speak of E. Z. C. Judson, alias 'Ned Buntline.' His has been a wonderful career, but ever tending downwards. Did dissipation and vice ever tend otherwise? A sailor, soldier, author, duelist, murderer, and drunkard—he excelled in all. No better sailor ever sailed a ship; a dead shot—he has fought and killed his man according to the code; a murderer—you remember the case of poor Porterfield at Nashville. A hard fate indeed, a wife seduced and her husband to die by the hand of the seducer. Judson is a drunkard now—the vilest of the vile, and the wreck of a man, a wretched, homeless vagabond."

THE grand father of Gen. Robert E. Lee was a rival of Gen. Washington in a love affair. The object of their affection was a beautiful Grimes, the first love of Washington, and whom he celebrated as "lowland beauty." Lee was successful and bore off the prize. The son of this marriage, "Light Horse" Harry Lee, was always held in great friendship by Washington; and Irving, in his biography, suggested this tenderness for the mother was not without its influence in connection with the son.

The friendship continued between them until the death of "the father of his country." Major General Harry Lee was a gallant officer, the author of "Memoirs of the War in the South; Governor of Virginia in 1791; an advocate of the federal constitution in the Virginia convention; a member of Congress when Washington died; appointed by Congress to deliver the eulogy, originated the classic words: "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen.

—Charles A. Camp of St. Louis married a wife in New York, some six years ago, and had two children by her, when he fell desperately in love with one of his wief's most intimate lady friends. He therefore came to Indiana, procured a divorce, and married No. 2, whereupon wife No. 1 caused him to be arrested at New York for bigamy. This was six years ago, and Camp forfeited bail, since when he has been living at St. Louis without the place of his residence being discovered. But he was in New York last week making purchases, when wife No. 1 caught a glimpse of him on the street, set the officers after him, and had him brought before Judge Russell in Chambers, who imposed $1,000 bail—a sum for which Camp instantly drew his check and left. The friends of Camp assert that the case will never come up for trial, in which event the county of New York, or somebody, will be richer to the extent of $1,000. Mrs. Camp appeared to have some regret in the matter, as she made the following observation in the District-Attorney's office: "I suppose Emma (the second wife) will feel bad at this; but she don't know how many tears it has cost me." What the Indiana divorce may be good for in law so far as the New York courts are concerned, may be thoroughly tested if Mr. Camp elects to try the case.

—The London Times of August 9th says of the discovery of gunpowder in the Houses of Parliament, the first news of which was received by the cable: "At three o'clock on Monday morning a somewhat startling discovery was made by the police on duty at the Houses of Parliament. A brown paper parcel was found, and what is called a slow-match attached to it. On examination the parcel was found to contain five pounds of fine gunpowder, done up in nine smaller parcels. A piece of string was tied several times round the parcel and round the match, and it is supposed that the whole was thrown over the wall with the fuses lighted. The string itself had been used as a fuse, and was burnt to the point at the edge of the parcel. The exact spot at which the powder was thrown is about fifteen paces from the Little Abingdon side of the Victoria Tower. At this spot the wall is nine feet high, and it is supposed that the person who committed this foolish and mischievous trick must have stood upon the steps of a public house at the extreme end of the wall. The powder, even if it had exploded, could not have done any harm to the Houses of Parliament beyond the breaking of a few windows."

Thick versus Thin Seeding.

The Peck of Wheat per Acre.

Year by year I become more and more convinced of the immense damage done to the British farmer by an oversowing of seed. The question is one much less important as a saving of seed than as a preventive of damage to, and diminuition of the growing crop. I have proved this by a simple experiment, and every farmer can, at small cost bring to his mind a proof of the proper quantity of seed to be sown according to his soil, climate, and circumstances.

This is the third year I have tried the experiment of half a peck on half an acre, in the middle of the field where my usual quantity of four pecks is sown. The former results have been recorded; the peck an acre having yielded seven quarters of two bushels per acre of fine wheat, and was the best yield on the field.

The experiments have been perfectly fair ones, the wheat being all put in at one time, and under the same circumstances in every respect except quantity. The thin sown was dibbled in, one kernel in a hole, about six inches by four and one half. The rest of the field was this year drilled with four and one half pecks per acre. The experiments for three years have been on clover lea, once mowed for hay, and then folded with sheep, eating cake, &c.

The thin-sown came up with single points and looked all the winter and early spring like a bare fallow, especially at a distance on the hill side it looked as though the four stretches had not been sown. So very wet and unfavorable were the winter and spring, that we thought this third year the thin sown could not come to a crop.

But slowly and surely it advanced, and has as yet become the best crop in the field, undistinguishable from the rest except by its superior height and the largeness of the ears. It will, of course, be tested by threshing. I have no doubt it will, as on former occasions, yield more weight of straw as well as more corn than the rest of the field. I expect it will give about five quarters per acre. This is not a good yielding year on our stiff, non-calcareous soils. It has astonished many who have watched its progress, and made many converts. Thin sowers must be content to hear from all who see their thin-sown crops during the early stages of their growth that they must prove a failure. These three years' experiments have given me perfect confidence in thin sowing under like circumstances; and I shall practice it gradually on a more extended scale as a safe and profitable investment. I think that the proper term for thin sowing, should be sufficient sowing.

I will endeavor by illustration to show how really unreasonable and injurious our general quantity sown must be. According to Mr. Caird and general estimates of the quantity of grain sown (wheat, oats, barley, &c.,) equals one-ninth of the product, so that we get (taking the whole kingdom) nine kernels for each one sown. An average ear of wheat, barley and oats would have forty kernels, therefore we only get a fifth of an ear for each kernel!

Now, I will defy any one who puts into the soil a perfect kernel of grain to produce so little as nine grains, or about the one-fifth part of an ear. The probability is, especially in the case of wheat, that if a space of three to five inches intervenes between that and the next kernel, the increase will be from 200 to 300, instead of nine. Many of mine have produced 600; how is it, then, that we arrive at the present miserable increase of nine for one? Those who observe nature's operations will soon receive a reply. By our system of two to four bushels per acre the kernels are crowded together, the young fibres are pushed forth, and fight with each other for the small available portion of soil. The result is many wounds, many deaths, plenty of cripples among the few survivors, whose diminutive development gives evidence of the severity of the deadly struggle. The crop that came up thick as a grass field soon becomes thin and weakly. The reverse of all this takes place with thin sowing, as the roots ramify and extend without meeting hungry and numerous competitors.

Baron Liebig justly says that the greatest enemy that a wheat plant can have is another wheat plant. This alone is a sufficient explanation. Many farmers say: "We don't like a thin wheat crop;" drawing their conclusions from the cases where the crop had become thin in consequence of over-crowding. So far as my experience goes, the grains are finer in size and quality, the straw more brilliant and glassy, and more free from blight or mildew than the thick sown, and there is more weight of straw per acre.

But see what benefits the young grass or clover plants derive from thin sowing. They thrive, having air and light, in the thin sown, while the thick sown and poor, soft-strawed laid crop, smothers and destroys them.

A neighbor of mine, who farms well, got so angry at losing his clover plant among his oats that he was determined to have a clover crop at the cost of his oats, so he only sowed one bushel instead of four, and to his great surprise (but not to mine) he had the best crop of oats he ever grew, and an ample clover plant besides. Of course, in speaking of thin sowing, I assume that the drill is used, and the seed thus properly deposited.

I use the blower to my seed corn, so as to have only heavy, perfect seeds—nine-tenths of which, at least, will vegetate.

It is really distressing to be told, as I have been lately, that "we always sow broadcast seven bushels of wheat. Supposing forty animals were placed in a luxuriant pasture, which would keep in good condition ten animals for three months, at first all would go well, but long before the three months had elapsed there would be plenty of deaths and a few cripples left. So it is with thick sowing.—J. J. Mechi, in Farmers' Gazette.

NEW RULES FOR THE INSPECTION OF GRAIN.—The Directors of the Chicago Board of Trade have issued the following new rules for the Inspection of Grain:

CHOICE EXTRA SPRING WHEAT.

To be sound, plump and well cleaned, and strictly choice milling Wheat.

NUMBER ONE SPRING WHEAT.

To be reasonably clean, sound, and free from other grain.

NUMBER TWO SPRING WHEAT.

To include merchantable Wheat, not good enough for number one.

REJECTED SPRING WHEAT.

All Wheat very dirty, or so much damaged from any cause as to make it unfit for warehousing.

The same rules to apply to Winter Wheat.

BARLEY—EXTRA.

To be plump, bright, clean, sound and free from other grain.

NUMBER ONE BARLEY.

To be sound and reasonably clean, and free from other grain.

NUMBER TWO BARLEY.

To include merchantable Barley, not good enough for number one.

REJECTED BARLEY.

Unsound, unmerchantable, and unfit for malting or warehousing.

The grading of Corn, Oats and Rye will remain unchanged.

GREEN CORN FOR TABLE USE IN WINTER.—Plant corn in the ordinary way about the 15th of July, giving it the usual care. About the time for early frost the corn will be suitable for table use, when, cut up the stalks and shock in the field. When needed for the table in winter, upon a shock and take out as much as wanted, and close the shock. This will furnish green corn in perfection. Try it and report result.—Prairie Farmer.

NATIONAL PECULIARITIES.—Edmund About says: At the age of twenty-five an American has tried a dozen ways of life, made four fortunes, a bankruptcy, and two campaigns, pleaded a cause, preached a religion, killed six men with a revolver, enfranchised a negress, and conquered an island. An Englishman has passed two examinations, been attached to an embassy, founded a counting house, converted a Catholic, made the tour of the world, and read the complete works of Sir Walter Scott. A Frenchman has rhymed a tragedy, written in two journals, received three sword wounds, attempted two suicides, troubled the peace of fourteen husbands, and changed his political opinions nineteen times over. A German has scarred the faces of fourteen of his intimate friends, swallowed sixty tons of beer and the philosophy of Hegel, sung eleven thousand couplets, compromised a maid servant, smoked a million of pipes, and been concerned in two revolutions. The Roman prince has done nothing, learned nothing, suffered nothing. The grate of a cloister is thrown open, a young girl with no more experience than himself is led forth, and these two innocents proceed to kneel before a priest, who licenses them to begin a fresh stock of innocents.

IN an obituary notice of an old citizen, an Ohio paper says: He was honest and industrious, until enfeebled by disease and old age.

ACTIVE MANURE.—One of the most active manures, and readily within the reach of most farmers, is a mixture of leached ashes, plaster, and night soil mixed with fine soil. Let them be thoroughly worked over on a smooth spot, and allowed to stand a week before using, working it over every other day, and you have a most valuable manure at a trifling cost of time. A handful of this mixture in a hill is excellent to give corn a start. Potatoes and garden vegetables generally feel it very quick. Hen manure is an excellent ingredient in such manures, but it should be well slacked with water before mixing with other substances.—Maine Farmer.

Some Troy scoundrel hired a little boy in Albany, recently, and after having his life insured, took him to a solitary locality, where he attempted to murder him. The boy broke from him and reached home.

DR. SWAIN'S VEGETABLE HAIR BALM invariably restores grey hair to its original color, without staining the skin or clothing. It leaves the most dry, dead and crisp hair, soft, moist and glossy, causes it to curl, and keeps it in its place, while it promotes its growth and prevents its falling off.

It contains neither oil or alcohol.

Numerous preparations of oil, alcohol and sulphur have been palmed upon the public, and having totally failed to give satisfaction, the manufacturers have deservedly come to grief.

Dr. Swain warrants his Vegetable Balm to accomplish all that he claims for it, and authorizes his agents to refund the money wherever it fails to give satisfaction.

It is an entirely new and scientific preparation, produced by the distilation of rare and fragrant flowers, which renders it not only the best renewer in the world, but makes it particularly agreeable as a hair dressing to both old and young, while its liquid purity and floral odor are in striking contrast with the nasty mixtures usually sold.

The proprietor has letters from many of the most distinguished as well as fashionable people, judges, clergymen, lawyers, physicians, opera singers, actresses, &c, certifying to the remarkable virtues of the Balm.

Don't let any dealer urge upon you a different article, but if your tradesman does not keep this, send one dollar for a trial bottle to the nearest agent, or the proprietor.

If for grey hair, send for No. 1.
If for hair dressing, send for No. 2.

C. H. Swain, proprietor, No. 34 South Water street, Chicago.

THE GREATEST
DISCOVERY OF THE AGE!

Farmers, Families, and others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr. Tobias' Venetian Liniment for dysentery, colic, croup, chronic rheumatism, sore throat, toothache, sea-sickness, cuts, burns, swellings, bruises, old sores, headache, mosquito bites, pains in the limbs, chest, back, &c. If it does not give relief, the money will be refunded. All that is asked is a trial, and use it according to the directions.

Dr. TOBIAS—Dear Sir: I have used your Venetian Liniment in my family for a number of years, and believe it to be the best article for what it is recommended that I have ever used. For sudden attack of the croup it is invaluable. I have no hesitation in recommending it for all the uses it professes to cure. I have sold it for many years, and it gives entire satisfaction. CHAS. TEN REASONS WHY
HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS
Should Have a Place in Every Home.

BECAUSE by invigorating the constitution and the frame they avert sickness.

BECAUSE (especially) their use prevents the atmospheric poison which produces epidemics from taking effect upon the system.

BECAUSE they cure indigestion and impart unwonted vigor to the stomach.

BECAUSE they are the best appetizing medicine at present known.

BECAUSE they are the only preparation upon which persons of a bilious habit can safely rely to keep the liver in good order.

BECAUSE they tone and regulate the bowels, and invariably relieve them when constipated, without causing undue relaxation.

BECAUSE they strengthen the nerves, clear the brain, and cheer the animal spirits.

BECAUSE in case of an attack of spasms or bilious colic they are the best thing that can be administered on the instant.

BECAUSE they combine the three properties of a tonic, an alterative and a nervine in their utmost purity and perfection.

BECAUSE they are a specific against Ague and Fever and all intermittents, and with all their potency as a preservative and a remedy, are as water from the mountain spring!

No matter of what undesirable tint the hair or whiskers or beard may be, the change to a superb and perfectly natural black or brown is accomplished by one application of

IMPORTANT QUALITIES.

They will cure a Weakness of the Back, Pain in the Side, a Lameness of the Knee or of the Ankles, or Cold Feet, sooner and with more comfort than any other application.

KNOXVILLE, Albany Co., Jan. 16, 1862.

Dr. T. ALLCOCK—Dear Sir: Seventeen years ago I was sorely injured in my back. At length I was induced to use your plasters. I wore one constantly for six months, and did more hard work during that six months than in the preceding fifteen years. I have not worn a plaster for over eighteen months, and have had no return of the gnawing pain and weakness in my back, but have been entirely well.

I am your obedient servant, JOHN G. CRARY.

DR. VELPAU'S FRENCH PILLS.

Ladies, take Particular Notice.

THE REAL VELPAU FEMALE PILL.

[WARRANTED FRENCH.]

THESE PILLS, so celebrated many years ago in Paris for the relief of female irregularities, and afterward so notorious for their criminal employment in the practice of abortion, are now offered for sale for the first time in America. They have been kept in comparative obscurity from the fact that the originator, Dr. Velpau, is a physician in Paris of great wealth and strict conscientious principles, and has withheld them from general use, lest they should be employed for unlawful purposes. In overcoming Female Obstructions, Falling of the Womb, Whites, Green Sickness, Suppression, Retention, or Immoderate Flow of the Monthly Discharges, they seem to be truly omnipotent, bursting open the flood-gates from whatever cause may have stopped them; but they are offered to the public only for legitimate uses, and all agents are forbidden to sell them when it is understood that the object is unlawful. Married ladies should never take them when there is any reason to believe themselves pregnant, for they will be sure to produce a miscarriage.

These pills are entirely safe under all circumstances, being composed entirely of substances from the vegetable kingdom.

Each box has the coat of arms for the City of Paris stamped on the box, with the words "Trade Mark" in French, to counterfeit which is a misdemeanor, and all persons will be dealt with according to law.

☞ Full directions accompany every box.

Ladies can obtain a box sealed from the eyes of the curious, by inclosing One Dollar and six post-office stamps to any respectable druggists, or to O. G. STAPLES, General Agent for the United States, Watertown, N. Y.

Base Ball.

The match game of Base Ball which came off last Thursday between the TECUMSEH and CHIEF Clubs resulted in a victory of the former. The Tecumseh Club claim that they are unmistakably the better club as the result of the game proves. On the other hand the Chief's contend that they played with four of their second nine, hence this game is by no means a test of their relative strength. They play another match to-morrow (Friday) afternoon, at 3 o'clock P. M. and should the first nine of the CHIEF all come to time, it will undoubtedly be the best contested game of Base Ball ever played on this Continent.

The following is the score of Thursday:

Rev. Wm. B. Hendryx preached in the Presbyterian Church last Sabbath morning and evening. Mr. Hendryx is a son of J. S Hendryx, an enterprising grocer and provision dealer of this place. He passed his school days in Tecumseh, prepared for College here under the instruction of Prof. Lawton and entered the University at Ann Arbor in the class of '64 with which class he graduated.—He has since been attending the theological Seminary at Auburn N. Y. and will graduate at that institution next summer. His discourses were finely written and displayed a good degree of biblical learning and correct literary taste. They were both very well received.

HORSE TRAINING.—A Mr. Rockwell from the east was in town last Saturday giving exhibitions in training horses.—He drove a span of horses through the streets without rain or bridle, and appeared to guide them as perfectly as many men could with reins. He organized a class here of about twenty-five, and they all expressed themselves very much pleased with his mode of instruction. His system of educating horses is far superior to that of any one who has been through here before.

"A little more of the same sort." R. C. Moore has another piece of that heavy Bleached Sheeting, two yards wide—just the width for a bed.

Patterson & Comfort's Brick Yard.

We paid a visit to this institution last week, and were quite surprised to find so successful a manufactory going on in our midst, and about which our citizens appear to know so little. The yard is situated about half a mile beyond the Raisin Mills and about two miles from the village on the banks of a small brook which empties into the Raisin, and upon a lot which adjoins the main road, about twelve acres in extent. The whole lot is underlaid with clay of the finest quality to the depth of from fifteen to twenty feet, and underneath the layer is a strip about four feet in thickness which good judges pronounce equal to the celebrated Milwaukee clay. This latter has been tested and makes a beautiful light colored brick. In short their supply of clay is inexhaustible, and at the same time it is of very superior quality.

They have now in operation two brick machines, one manufactured at Chicago, and the other a patent of our townsman Mr. John J. Alvord, and one tile machine. These machines will each of them turn out about 40 brick per minute, which is equivalent to about twenty-five thousand a day. They have also in operation two horse power machines of the old style, from which brick are made by hand. Notwithstanding the drawbacks which always accompany a new enterprise of this kind, the proprietors have already this season, turned out about 600,000 brick and 70,000 tile. It is their intention to turn out 400,000 more brick and 130,000 more tile before the close of the season. They manufacture tile of two patterns, round and arched, and of various sizes ranging from one and one half inches to nine inches in diameter. A large boarding house has been put up upon the premises for the accomodation of the employees, who number about twenty-five when there is a full gang at work. The yard is now in good working order, and the arrangements are nearly complete. With the start which the owners of the yard have made in brick making this summer, and with one years experience in the business they calculate to be able next season to turn out two million brick and half a million of tile.

We are indebted to Mr. Samuel Rappleye for a cluster of mammoth tomatoes weighing 6 pounds. They would have been just the thing for the State fair; also a new variety of apples, which he called "Victuals and Drink." They were all that the name indicates. Mr. Israel Pennington of Macon brought us a very fine variety of apples, the name of which we do not now recollect. Suffice it to say they were a No 1. Those who wish good fruit are never disappointed if they purchase of Mr. Penington. Mr. P. S. DePuy, for a jug of superior new cider.

now i ges ile say rite here that i dunt spect to shine muce in them are hals out to washingtown gest yet.—cause i dont own peples enuf to send me up thar on, i wish i did have fathers and brothers and grandads enuf to hist me in there once, so i cud give them ar fellers a pece of mi mind rite to thar gobs; whack, but i aint a ful grone politian yet, i aint got bulky, and i aint shed my onest teeth yet either, and i ges a feller dozent have any much biznes there til he can sho some ov thes ere qualificashions.

now i shall take up pint after pint and give mi pinon on the pints as i pas along, and after i git thru a fu minetes i shal then conklude to stop.

the first pint that i shal notis wil b his exclency prescident jonson, i no well enuf miself, but not only that, i have hearn the peples say that his exclency dident do fair in trien to buy them are states way doun south thar back in the govment alone.—he orter changed works round some way til he got a lot ov fellers, and then placed em back whar tha uster formely reside; it seames as ef his exclency wanted to fix her afore she was ready to fix, and i am suer times apeerd the old gent has fixed hisself; but i dunt no, really, then another pint, his exclency i dunt no, but i dont think he did fair in makin sich speches as what he maid down thar to whar he lives, i hearn the peoples sa tha never feeled so shocked about anything in thar da, as tha did to here his exclency make sich speches as what he did, now peples, ef his exclency has acted that which am not decent in the govment in whitch he resides, then one ov them ar torpedos wil ignit him and his exclency am forever busted.

the next pint wil b congres, that congres aint sich a congres as i wish it was settin thar, tha never orter ov rased thar wages in thes pincin times, when we hav got to pa so much mony out for other things; i think it was a mean trick ov em to do it, at this time ov lif; tha had enuf afore, and anybodi nose that enuf is enuf and any man what wants moer am a hog in the govment in whitch he rezides; evry persun nose us pepels down here bi tecumsch hav got to pa rite out ov our pockets, slap, and who wants sich work as that, i for one am bold to see that i hate it.

kark! i think i overheer mi wif; i orter overheer her, sich a whalins belt, as she gest laid me side ov mi hed, mi wif thinks i am one ov them ar radicals, and she's a ful goin jonson man, i wish hiz exclency the presiden wud appint my wif to som little post-office, she luves to kontrol the male so wel, i think it wud ticel her to deth; but i gest left this essa a moment and toald my wif she orter be ashamed to belt a orater, specaly on the sied ov his hed for a oraters hed is his mane dependence for what he's goin to sa; so i gest tolld mi wif that she cold kount herself out ov mi unium; i tolld her for her bould konduct she cudent represent herself to me any mor til she abolliched herself; and she son bolltched herself; then i giv wa sum, and she give wa sum, and i admited her back to al her ould rites and munities what she had ever had afore. any pepels what'l git ther pinions wa up hi and kepe em up thar let cum what wil; sich a pursen are not a decent man in the govment in whitch rezides, thats mi pinion ov that.

now if the prsidant and congres wud each giv wa sum, tha mite let them are sister states down south thar cuni bac hum and se thar deer sisters, wa up north hear; how pleesed tha wud b to se each other, and how it wud ticle the bruthers to se sich sisterly luve goin on once moer, mi pinion is tha orter cum bac haistely, on that akount if nothin els; but tha hav bolished themselfs, and when peples bolish tharselfs tha are gest so good as tha was afore, i no that bi mi own wif, so now.

O—deer me, sum times i dont no mi self how the govment wil turn, but mi pinion is at precent that i shal turn with mi govment, for i luv mi govment and i want mi govment to luv me, and i luv pease, and i want the peples to act more meeker at each other than what tha hav on mi acount if nothin els, for i am gest spilin for pease now.

i spect you think i orter cum rite out and tel gest what mi beleif in poletix ain, wal I dont hapen to think so; i dont think it aters prudent for a orater to blab out his beleef in them are things; caus the govment mite tak a turn and it mite not turn the same wa with his beleef, and if she shoadent, wi it wud gest turn him rite out ov the govment; i ges a orater has got sence enuf to fore se that.

the next pint wil b presidant davis and his exclency, i for one dont think mr. davis has don quit the fair thing in the govment in whitch he rezides, i think he did sum things what wud ov ben more credet to hiself if he hadent did it, now sum peples want him hung wa up hi, and sum peples dont want him hung so hi; now whi cant tha git thar pinions togethar and have pease.

i think the peples orter b moer carfuler who tha send up to thoseare hi offices, for sum ov themare hi offisers haz maid us constituents a heap ov trowbel, if I vote for any man any moer and he aint a desent man in the govment, he wont git mi vote eny moer unles he pais me for it afor he gits it.

now fellar peples if you must be mean, dont tri to git any meener for sake, for i luve pease in the govment in whitch i resid, i fel gilty ov miself to think i cant give you more ov a snopsis ov the govment but i trust you wil parden me, when i tel you that at sum futur time (god wilin you shal se the oratory spil out ov mi mouth with your oun i's; and when you se that with all its cogent suavity spil over on mi chin, and cum to you fresh, then i trust you'l parden me, and you'l wish was a child again too.

i am in favor ov internal improvements, sich as borin holes in the arth for ile, and borin in barels after beer, and i wood faver the idee ov borin in peples heds after brains, but i am afeered we coldnt find enuf to pay. i am in fover ov anuther big ishue ov stamps to liquidate our national dets; i want two pacific raleroads lade doun this fall, i want thre or fore moer senators aloued out ov each state, i want that atlantic cabel taken out ov that salt water, i am aferd it'l rust out and spile, i want our deer sisters to run together and hav a little pla spel rite of now; i want to be presidant ov the sister states as soon as tha get to hugin each uther, i want that ar pokerish bridge up thar to niagary suspended, i want the negers if tha are goin to vote, to be whitwashed twise a weak, i want the constiteshin fixed so that ile b a senater thre yers out ov five for life.

and most ov al i want a pese in the govment in whitch i reside, mi name is samuel patch, i live up bi tecumsy i am a distant reltive ov sum ole pare ov pached pantloons what sum ov you hav got yourounselfs. i am goin inter the champane this fall with a bold front, i shal create moer excitement with the peples felins whar i champane than Phil. did in the shenadoy vailey.

Burglary.

Last Friday night the residences of Mr. Kneeland, Baxter, Geo. Curtis and J. S. Waldo were entered by Burglars. Messrs. Curtis and Waldo lost but little as the thieves only succeeded in getting into the wood houses. From Mr. Kneeland they took some canned fruit, and a few other small articles. But Mr. Baxter they honored with a more important visit. They entered his house through a door which he had failed to fasten the night before, and upon their departure took away with them three coats, one over coat, five cartridges, which were in his vest pocket, and his wallet containing about twenty-five dollars in money.—escaped with their booty in safety. No clue has, as yet been obtained of their whereabouts.

WOULDN'T YOU LIKE TO KNOW?

The most musical and bewitching thing we have read lately is the following, by John G. Saxe.

I know a girl with teeth of pearl,
And shoulders white as snow;
She lives, ah! well,
I must not tell—
Wouldn't you like to know?

Her sunny hair is wondrous fair,
And wavy in its flow;
Who made it less
One little tress—
Wouldn't you like to know?

Her eyes are blue (celestial hue!)
And dazzling in their glow;
On whom they beam
With melting gleam—
Wouldn't you like to know?

Her lips are red and finely wed,
Like roses ere they blow;
What lover sips
Those dewy lips—
Wouldn't you like to know?

Her fingers are like lilies fair
When lilies fairest grow;
Whose hand they press
With fond caress—
Wouldn't you like to know?

Her foot is small and has a fall
Like snowflakes on the snow;
But where it goes
Beneath the rose—
Wouldn't you like to know?

She has a name, the sweetest name
That language can bestow;
To add to her my spell
In I should tell—
Wouldn't you like to know?

Garibaldi Conscience-Stricken.

BY ALEXANDRE DUMAS.

All at once the Duchess of Argyll said to him, "General, everybody is asking you to relate the admirable incidents and the noble deeds of your life to applaud them. I, on the contrary, wish to blame you. Come, now, tell me what is the action of your adventurous life which has left most regret in your bosom—what is the deed which gives you most self-reproach?"

The General seemed to have expected the question, for he did not hesitate a moment, but replied at once:

"May it please your grace, it is an act of injustice of which I was once guilty."

"You guilty of an act of injustice?"

"Yes, indeed, I myself."

"And pray to whom?"

"To a dog."

A peal of laughter greeted this confession, and the noble company pressed still nearer around him and begged him to tell them all about it. Whereupon Garibaldi (the most picturesque of narrators), mixing with his story a description of the diversified landscapes of Sicily and the Calabrias, told them the following story:

"You know, my ladies, when I set out on my Neapolitan campaign, I had around me representatives of all the nations of the world. England was represented by Pearce, Dunn, and Seyton Burgh; Hungary by Turr, Dunioff, and Turkery; France by Alexandre Dumas, Paul de Holte, and Maxime Ducamp. The hero of my story is Seyton Burgh, or rather his dog. This dog served me as a spy, as a postboy, as a reconnoiterer, as an aid-de-camp, as a purveyor, and he saved my life. His name was Mustang, which is, as you know, the name given to the wild horses on the pampas of South America. He was a bloodhound. He was a dog of ordinary size, but vigorous and well built. His hair was a light fawn-color, except his head, which was black. Bloodhounds, like bulldogs, never relinquish their hold when once they have seized anything with their teeth. You may kill them; even after death their teeth will keep as stout hold as in life.

"The whole race is said to be intelligent, but Mustang was certainly the most intelligent dog of the race. No sooner did his master give him an order in English, with some particular instructions, if the order was a complicated one, than Mustang went off; and the order was executed with a rapidity, courage and intelligence which would have reflected honor on a great many of those bipeds called men. His master was a young man of nineteen or twenty years old, a native of Exeter, very tall, very slender, rather consumptive-looking, and devoted to his dog, with whom he had contrived to establish a complete understanding, which enabled him to explain all his thoughts and wishes to his faithful four-footed companion.

"The first time I had an opportunity of appreciating Mustang's talents (I confess I had not paid much attention to him previously), was about half an hour before the battle of Calatafimi. The Neapolitans had marched out against us as far as Calatafimi, which they occupied. When we reached the summit of the mountain we perceived Calatafimi, and in front of the town three hills occupied by the Royalists. They were busily engaged in preparing their breakfasts. As I was opposed to leading hungry soldiers to fight well-fed men, I gave my followers thirty minutes to enable them to match their adversaries. Ranks were broken at once, and every man drew from his bag the provisions it contained. My breakfast, as usual, consisted of a piece of bread and a glass of water; and I had put myself in the most comfortable position to enjoy my meal. The first mouthful had scarcely passed my lips when Seyton Burgh came up and offered me his well-furnished bag. I declined.

"He said, 'I dare say, General, you would prefer eating one of those chickens which the Neapolitans are roasting on their ramrods yonder?'

"I replied, 'Indeed I should, merely for the pleasure of boarding them with one of their own chickens. Had I one of them, I should abandon my frugal habits.'

"'Well, then, nothing is easier, General. Here, Mustang! Here! Poor fellow! Poor fellow!'

"Mustang came running up wagging his tail. Seyton Burgh took the dog by the ears, turned his head toward the Neapolitans roasting chickens, gravely talked to him in English, made him, as it were, smell the odor of the chickens on ramrods, and ended all by exclaiming vigorously, 'Go, now!'

"At this command, Mustang darted off like a greyhound, and crossed the valley; when he came to a small stream he stopped to drink, in order to throw off their guard (so Seyton Burgh told me), those who saw him leave our camp, and who might consequently have distrusted his intentions. He followed the course of the stream for a hundred paces, and then began to ascend the opposite hill. He moved cautiously, made circuits, and approached gradually but still approached the enemy's bivouac.

"I exclaimed, 'I declare, your dog takes his own time about it!'

"Seyton Burgh gravely replied, 'He does so to give the chickens time to cook. The minute he sees one done brown he will run off with it.'

"All at once we saw him make his appearance near a bush, and some twenty steps from a group of officers. He acted like a well-bred, respectful dog, by sitting at a distance, licking his chops, and inhaling the odor of the roasting chickens. Touched by the well-bred bearing of this parasite, the Neapolitan officers called him. Mustang advanced with feigned timidity, allowed one to caress and another to kick him, watched, spied, and kept getting nearer and nearer the ramrod which served as turnspit. When he saw a soldier remove from the fire a ramrod in whose middle was a nice young turkey cooked perfect, and of a beautiful brown—suddenly, and when the officers expected it the least—Mustang jumped at the ramrod, seized it by one end, and darted off like an arrow towards his master, who had gone to meet him almost within musket-shot of the Neapolitans.

"The moment they recovered from their surprise the officers discharged their revolvers at the bounding dog. One ball went through the fleshy portion of his thigh, but it did not slacken his speed, and five minutes afterwards I was carving the Neapolitan turkey, and helping Turr to a wing and Bixio to a drumstick. Seyton Burgh had taken out his campaigning medicine-chest, and, after satisfying himself Mustang had no bones broken, he bathed the wound with brandy and water, and said to me, 'General, when you have picked the bones clean, please give them to your purveyor.'

"Mustang had the bones, and although our surgeon pretended that in wounds by fire-arms it was absolutely necessary the patient should be strictly dieted, Mustang rapidly got well. He entered Palermo in triumph with us, and, saving the scar which remained visible as a glorious token of his courage, Mustang was perfectly cured."

"Huarah for Mustang!" exclaimed the Duke of Sutherland, who had returned to the drawing-room, and had heard the last part of the first story.

"Go on, General! Go on! You have not told us all!" cried the ladies with one voice.

"Willingly, my ladies," replied Garibaldi, "although the remainder of the story is not to my honor. At Reggio it became very desirable to send a message to the Neapolitan commander. He had brutally declared he was resolved to blow up the fortress and everybody in it, sooner than surrender; and he added, he would hang every bearer of a flag of truce sent to him, as such banditti and rebels as we were had no right to invoke the law of nations. If we believed his own menaces, to send him a man was to sentence this man to certain death. I was extremely embarrassed, when Seyton Burgh came up and said: 'General, if you will give me your proposals in writing and signed by you, I will undertake to transmit them to Don Bernardo Marini.' This was the name of the terrible governor.

"I wrote: 'The lives of all spared. All officers promoted one step. Ten ducats for each soldier. Provided the fortress be surrendered without combat. If I take it by assault, every officer and man shall be put to death.' I signed it.

"Seyton Burgh took it, slipped it in a tobacco-pouch, which he fastened around Mustang's neck, and put in Mustang's mouth one end of a white handkerchief, leaving the other ends floating in the air. At the same time I ordered a white flag to hoisted at the vanguard, and made the trumpeter sound the flag of truce flourish.

"The Neapolitan sentinel, seeing a dog coming towards him with a tobacco-pouch around his neck and handkerchief in his mouth, determined to make himself master of pouch and handkerchief by ripping open the dog with his bayonet. But Mustang perceiving—unfortunately a little late—the hostile intentions of the sentinel, jumped aside. Nevertheless, the sentinel's bayonet hit the poor dog in the eye and destroyed it; but Mustang was not a dog to stop for one eye more or less. He did not even yell, for fear of dropping the handkerchief, but ran around the sentinel and entered the fortress.

"The commander of the fortress, informed that a white flag was displayed at my vanguard, went to a window, and seeing a dog with a white handkerchief in his mouth advancing towards the fortress, understood a portion of what had taken place. To discover the whole truth he went out himself to meet the messenger, took the tobacco-pouch, read my missive, assembled a council of war, discussed the question, sent back his reply by Mustang, and surrendered the fortress that night.

"I heard with the greatest regret the accident which happened to my bearer of the flag of truce; but remembering Philip of Macedon lost his right eye in battle, and Hannibal lost his left eye in another battle, I consoled myself, and mentally placed Mustang on a level with the most illustrious one-eyed heroes of ancient and modern times. Moreover, when I entered Naples he was completely cured, and it was for him the famous saying, 'See Naples and die,' came near being the truth.

"Mustang followed me, or rather his master, to Caserta. I need not relate to you an account of the battle of Volturna, which decided the fate of the Neapolitan monarchy. It was fought from daybreak, and about one o'clock of the evening it was well nigh lost to us. Nevertheless, I had at Santa Maria about one thousand men who had taken no part in the fight. It became extremely important to handle in the best possible manner this last resource.

"At one o'clock I went to Mont St. Angelo accompanied by an aid-de-camp. I climbed half way up the mountain to get a general view of the whole battle-field, and see our true position. After an examination of ten minutes, I went down the hill to regain my carriage, which I had left at the foot of the hill. The ambulance was half way between the two places. Seyton Burgh was at the ambulance, sick and wounded; but feeling the battle coming near him, he could not resist his desire to take part in it. I saw him firing on the Neapolitans with a long-range rifle from his carriage. Mustang was on the front seat. I cried to him as I drove by: 'Good morning, Seyton Burgh! We have won the battle. I expect you to supper at Caserta this evening.'

"'Hurrah for Garibaldi!' he exclaimed, while Mustang, whom he had taught to bark whenever he heard my name, sprang up and began to bark lustily.

"I kept on my way. As I turned around the hill a battery of Neapolitan artillery, which had secretly been posted in a clump of trees, opened fire on me. I thought for an instant I was in the midst of an eruption of Vesuvius. One of the horses of my carriage fell dead. My driver tumbled from the box mortally wounded. The ordnance officer, who followed me on horseback, had his arm broken. In the very height of all this confusion, fifteen Croat horsemen charged on us. They surrounded my carriage in the twinkling of an eye.

"As usual, I unfortunately had no offensive and defensive arms except my sabre. I used it so well that two horsemen fell. Meantime my aid-de-camp did his best with his revolver. He killed one man and dangerously wounded another. Still there were twelve horsemen against us three, and we should have had the greatest difficulty in getting rid of them had there not fallen from the sky allies we were far from expecting.

"When Seyton Burgh saw us attacked by fifteen horsemen, he drove his carriage towards us as fast as he could urge the horses. Suddenly he charged those who were attacking us, and knocking down with his pole and wheels men and horses, while with his revolver he killed a Croat who was about running his sword through me. Another raised his sabre over my head, when Mustang leaped from his master's carriage on the neck of the Croat's horse, and from thence to the Croat's. The cries of the Croat strangled by Mustang, brought a comrade to his assistance. This second Croat gave Mustang a stroke with his sword which cut off one of the latter's ears, and laid his backbone bare. Mustang, however, did not let go his hold until his adversary fell a dead man from his saddle. He did not lose sight of the Croat who had wounded him, all one-eyed as he was. The moment the first Croat fell he sprang upon the other and strangled him. Meanwhile, I felled a third Croat. My aid-de-camp and Seyton Burgh fired right and left with their revolvers. We breathed again. Eight or ten Croats lay in the dust; the others took to their heels. My aid-de-camp, I, and Mustang got into Seyton Burgh's carriage. Seyton Burgh mounted the box and drove the horses to Santa Maria as fast as they could go. I met the reserve of one thousand men; I put myself at their head. We charged the Neapolitans; we broke their centre. The battle was won. We supped at Caserta, as I had said to Seyton Burgh we should do."

"Hurrah for Mustang!" exclaimed the Duke of Sutherland.

"Well, your Grace," said Garibaldi, laughing, "I was guilty of gross injustice in not making Mustang a colonel."

"What, General!" said the Countess of Derby, "make a dog a colonel!"

"O my lady," replied Garibaldi, "I have made men generals who never so much as saw the enemy, and others, who when they did see the enemy, were so scared they could scarcely keep their saddles."

"But why did you give such cowards such high places?" asked Lady Lennox.

"Because, my lady, we wanted to attract all men to our flag. Promotion attracted officers, and for one poor officer I got ten good ones by this means."

"And what became of Mustang?" inquired the Countess of Moreton.

"Alas! my lady, I cannot tell you, and therein lies my ingratitude. When I left Naples in November, Seyton Burgh was still an invalid at Castellamore. Mustang was with him, and I hope his wounds were cured. I had so many things to do I did not think of either master or dog. But when I reached Caprera, and remembered how people were a little ungrateful to me, I remembered I too had been ungrateful to others."

"Only to a dog, General!" said the Countess of Derby.

"I believe God looks upon the crime as great as if I had been guilty of it towards a man instead of towards a dog," said Garibaldi.

New York Misers.

It is not generally known that New York at the present time contains a large number of misers as inveterate and degraded as any on record, and if we had space we could give a series of portraits of wealth and avarice which would make any reader shudder. Many of these misers are old business men who have withdrawn from active life and still keep up their faded and weather-stained signs, and beneath the garb of trade ply their money-saving habits. These men will be found sitting solitary in dingy offices, filled with cob-webs and thick with the dust of many years. Money borrowers know where to go, and here these pale and threadbare fossils receive the best securities for their daily loans. Some of these half-starved wretches, whose trembling hands can hardly sign a check, can draw for sums that would shake a bank. One of the richest men in the city is now to be found in just such a dingy hole as we have described, where he loans enormous sums daily. He was a merchant once, and his old sign is still up; and inside things remain as they were a half century ago. He suffers daily for the comforts of life; but all this is compensated for by the pleasure of accumulation. "They come to me to beg," said the old man to an acquaintance, "and there's not a beggar in New York that does not live as well as I do,"—a statement which was quite true.

A specimen of the better class of this genus was given in the late Exchange place robbery, where Rufus Lord, a man upwards of four score, was the solitary occupant of an office which contained between one million and two million in stocks and securities—all his own. Here this old man sat, day after day, accumulating at the rate of $2,000 per week, and no doubt hoping in due time to get rich. Such a hoard was worth tapping, and the job was one of the neatest and most successful ever done in New York.

The late Stephen Whitney was a striking instance of the commercial miser. When we knew him he had made about 10,000,000 and at the age of 75, was trying hard to get rich. The person and countenance of this wretched man were a study. The tremulous form, the sharpened features, and the solicitous eye told of the one idea which mastered the soul. Mr. Whitney was, in his day, to be seen habitually in Wall street, picking his way along among the brokers and sharpers, and buying notes, of which he was a good judge. He bought none but he best, and seldom made a bad purchase. His son-in-law was in a heavy business; but his paper was not considered first rate, the only chance of his success being that the old man would keep him up. This chance we used to hear often discussed, and on its probabilities his paper found a market. But the old man did not keep him, and he showed himself too sharp to be gulled even by so near a relative. Mr. Whitney was something of a politician, and on one occasion the leaders of his party came with an application for funds for electioneering purposes. "Gentlemen," was the reply, "I am with you heart and body. As for money, I have none; but to help along, I will come and sit up all night and fold ballots."

Some of these New York misers are utterly recluse, while others are social, and often meet to discuss methods of money-making. The group occasionally seen in a certain old rookery, where a few millions are represented in hungry forms and seedy raiment, would be study for an artist. The complaint with this class is that "interest is down, money is cheap, and the country is going to ruin. Only five per cent. on good paper, and six on bond and mortgage; and as for seven-thirties, they pay well enough, but one may get his throat cut taking care of them. The world's made up of thieves and beggars, and there's no use trying to get along."—New York Citizen.

THIRD ROUND.

At the call of the judges Dexter went first to the bat after three false starts, with Butster acting as center field at the quarter pole, when the ropes were cut, and an alarm of police was raised, with Dexter three lenghts against the cushion, and gradually passing the score to Butster. Notwithstanding the tremendous pace at which they were going, Butster was a good second, behaved wonderfully well, and showed as a pheasant, though the balls broke badly for him, and he was not accustomed to a left hand pitcher. Swinging round the half mile stretch, Butster took his gruel kindly, and delivered his mawley straight on the dial, Dexler continuing gradually to close up, with the evident intention of shutting him out. Butster was not to be led, and again broke away, with Dexter at his heel, which drew the claret profusely. It was now anybody's race, and large investments were made on the favorite at any odds. But Dexter having read a paper "On the Antediluvian races, with some speculations as to weather they were the best three in five, together with their effect upon the Decimal and Metric System of the Siluerean Period," had it all his own way, and ran the game out with ease, Butster's seconds throwing up the sponge in forty-five minute:

A NEWSPAPER editor inadvertently wrote about a woman who had not been buried with proper observance, the following sentence: "She was buried like a dog with her clothes on." Next week he saw his mistake and corrected it thus: "She was buried with her clothes on like a dog." The third week, exasperated with the previous blunders, he had it thus: "Like a dog with her clothes on she was buried." He gave it up.

A splice was made, and the Great Eastern at once started for Heart's Content, paying out the second line of cable. Up to the 8th everything was reported well, the news being sent to Ireland and thence back to New Foundland.

The provisions of the new internal revenue law, designed to prevent the frauds that had become so common in the production and sale of whisky and other alcoholic liquors, went into effect the 1st of September, and a great many of the smaller distilleries are to be closed, because their owners find it inexpedient or impossible to continue their business under the new regulations.

The Presidential party left Niagara, N. Y. on the morning of the 3d inst., and proceeded to Buffalo, where they were warmly received. Ex-President Fillmore, in a lengthy address, welcomed the distinguished guests to the city. The President and Secretary Seward returned the thanks of the party for the compliment. From Buffalo to Cleveland every station was crowded with spectators, who loudly cheered the President and suite, and manifested other demonstrations of respect. The train arrived in Cleveland in the evening, where another grand reception was given them. After supper, the President addressed a large crowd assembled in front of the Kennard House.

The party proceeded to Toledo and Detroit, where the President also addressed the crowd, and arrived in Chicago on the evening of the 5th. No official preparations being made by the Common Council or Board or Trade, the President and suite went to the Sherman House, where Mr. Johnson made an address to the multitude.

The laying of the corner stone of the Douglas Monument was performed on the 6th, in the presence of an immense throng, before the highest dignitaries of the nation. The President made a short speech to the large crowd assembled in front of the hotel, after which a number of distinguished persons were formally introduced.

Foreign News.

King William of Prussia has issued a decree, annexing to his monarchy the Kingdom of Hanover, the Electorate of Hesse, the Duchy of Nassau, and the Free City of Frankfort.

Napoleon has written a letter to King Victor Emanuel, rejoicing that the era of peace has returned. How far the Prussian needle gun was instrumental in framing this happy condition of the Emperor's mind is left to conjecture.

The South.

A large fire in the Dismal Swamp is raging, doing extensive damage to the timber. Numbers of bears and other wild animals have been driven from their lairs, and are seen by the passengers on the railroad.

The picking of the cotton crop is at this moment being actively carried on in all the cotton States of the South, and, by the expiration of the coming month, it will nearly all be everywhere gathered. The New York Times says "the estimates of the yield differ as greatly now as they did a year ago when the planting was going on, and it is evident that we can obtain no reliable measure of the entire amount until the returns are regularly furnished from each of the States."

The West.

The first train from St. Paul to St. Cloud, Minnesota, passed over the Pacific Railroad on Monday, the 3d inst.

After 136 ballots, B. F. Hopkins, of Madison, Wisconsin, was nominated as Republican candidate for Congress on the 6th.

Two children, three or four years of age, were run over in Chicago, on the 3d inst., within two hours of each other, by the State street horse cars. The wheels passed over the head of one and the body of the other, cutting them literally in two. The drivers were immediately arrested but subsequently released, as no carelessness could be proved against them.

A terrible rain storm prevailed in the southern part of Ohio on the night of the 3d. At Cincinnati, Deer Creek, running through the eastern portion of the city, overflowed its banks, carrying away about thirty houses. Longworth's wine cellars were destroyed. Other property was damaged. Several lives were lost. The loss is estimated at $400,000.

On the 5th, Col. Chas. Moss, of Missouri, introduced a resolution for debate instructing the Committee on Resolutions to report in favor of impartial suffrage. This brought the vexed question fairly before the assembly. The Tennessee members are unanimously in favor of colored suffrage, but the general sentiment was in favor of the Congressional plan of representation conditional upon suffrage.

Major General Terry intends to start on the 8th of September next to make a reconoissance of the new department he is to command. His department includes Minnesota, the eastern part of Dakota, and a part of Montana, his headquarters being at Fort Snelling, near St. Paul Minnesota. Between Forts Rice and Snelling he will establish military posts for the protection of a contemplated wagon road which General Sherman is anxious to push through to Montana.

The cholera at St. Louis brought several curious old misers to light by killing them. In one case, $9,000 in 5-20 bonds were found sewed in the clothes of an old German buried as a pauper. The St. Louis Democrat gives another. It says: A German named Young, a gardener on Carabet Island, died a few days ago of cholera On his death-bed he told his wife he had some $10,000 buried in a certain spot on the island, and requested her, on his demise, to dig it up, and place it in the hands of Mr. F. Overstolz for her benefit. Mrs. Young did as directed, and found the money all right, and gave it to Mr. Overstolz to keep for her. Some six years ago Young had received pecuniary assistance from Mr. Overstolz, who started him in business when he was penniless. The gardener prospered, and remembered his benefactor.

The East.

A terrible accident occurred on the New York Central Railroad, near Rochester, on the evening of the 5th, by which five persons were instantly killed and thirty-five severely injured. It was caused by a switch being carelessly left open.

The Union League House, on Broad street, Philadelphia, costing $200,000, and owned by 2,300 members, was partially destroyed by fire on the morning of the 7th. The cutting of the water pipes showed conclusively that it was the work of an incendiary.

A heavy defalcation, amounting to not less than $27,000, from the funds of the First National Bank at Greenfield, Massachusetts, has lately been discovered. The money was abstracted at various periods for some time past, by I. C. Tenney, the teller of the bank.

Addresses were made by Senator Lane, of Indiana, Senator Harris, of New York, Rev. Mr. Conway, of New York, Hon. H. Maynard, of Tennessee, and Lieutenant Governor Bross, of Illinois, offered a prayer.

A fire broke out on Sunday morning, the 2d inst., in a lumber yard connected with the United States arsenal, in Watertown, Massachusetts, which communicated to a large brick building used for storage for saltpetre, sulphur, and other gunpowder material. A tremendous explosion followed, which was felt sensibly eight or ten miles distant. The building was nearly demolished, as were some wooden buildings adjoining, and many dwellings were shaken, and a large quantity of window glass broken in the vicinity. Three or four persons were injured by the explosion, but none fatally.

A BROWNLOWISM.—Parson Brownlow remarked at the recent Philadelphia Convention:

"It had been said that he (Brownlow) was afraid of negro suffrage. He never had held a doubtful position on any question. He had no hesitation in saying he was for negro suffrage. He would rather be elected to an office by loyal negroes than disloyal whites. He would rather associate with loyal negroes in private life than with white rebels. He would rather be buried in a negro graveyard than in a rebel graveyard, and if he had to go to hell or heaven after death, he would rather go with negroes than with rebels. He withheld his motion to adjourn sine die."

MR. BIRD, of Birmingham, has patented the use of the neutral sulphate of alumina for purifying water. Its action depends upon the presence of carbonate of lime in the water to set free hydrated alumina, and as carbonate of lime it is almost universally applicable. The advantage of the use of this compound is, that beyond converting carbonate into sulphate of lime it introduces no new salt, while the organic matter is carried down with the hydrated alumina.

PHILADELPHIA SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

The convention of Southern delegates met in Philadelphia, on the 3d, in the National Hall, and organized by the election of Mr. Durant as temporary Chairman. Gen. Speed, of Kentucky, next day was elected permanent President. They continued in session until Friday, and united upon the following platform:

RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. Hamilton of Texas, from the Committee on Resolutions, reported the following:

Resolved, That the loyal people of the South cordially unite with the loyal people of the North in thanksgiving to Almighty God, through whose will a rebellion unparalleled for its causelessness, its cruelty, and its criminality has been overruled, to the vindication of the supremacy of the Federal Constitution over every State and Territory of the Republic.

Resolved, That we demand, as we have demanded at all times since the cessation of hostilities, the restoration of the States in which we live to their old relations with the Union, on the simplest conditions consistent with the protection of our lives, property and political rights, now in jeopardy from the unquenched enmity of rebels lately in arms.

Resolved, That the unhappy policy of Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, is, in its effects upon the loyal people of the South, unjust, oppressive; and, accordingly, however ardently we desire our respective States once more represented in the Congress of the nation, we would deeply regret restoration on the inadequate conditions prescribed by the President as tending, not to abate, but only to magnify the perils and sorrows of our condition.

Resolved, That the welcome we have received from the loyal citizens of Philadelphia, under the roof of the time-honored hall in which the Declaration of Independence was adopted, inspires us with the hope that the principles of just and equal government, which were made the foundation of the Republic at its origin, shall become the corner-stone of the Constitution.

Resolved, That, with pride in the patriotism of the Congress, with gratitude for the fearless and persistant support they have given to the cause of loyalty, and their efforts to restore all the States to their former conditions as States in the American Union, we will stand by the position taken by them, and take all means consistent with a peaceful and lawful course to secure the ratification of amendments to the Constitution of the United States, as proposed by Congress at its recent session; but regret that the Congress in its wisdom did not provide by law for the greater security of the loyal people in States not yet admitted to representation.

Resolved, That the political power of the Government of the United States in the administration of public affairs, is, by its Constitution, confided to the popular or law-making department of the Government.

Resolved, That the political status of States lately in rebellion to the United States Government, and the rights of the people of such States are political questions, and are, therefore, clearly within the control of Congress, to the exclusion of, and independent of, any and every other department of the Government.

Resolved, That there is no right, political, legal, or constitutional, in any State, to secede or withdraw from the Union; but they may, by wicked and unauthorized resolutions and force, sever the relations which they have sustained to the Union, and, when they do, they assume the attitude of public enemies at war with the United States. They subject themselves to all the rules and principles of international law and the laws of war applicable to belligerents, according to modern usage.

Resolved, That we are unalterably in favor of the Union of the States, and earnestly desire the legal and speedy restoration of all the States to their proper places in the Union, and the establishment in each of them of influences of patriotism and justice, by which the whole nation shall be combined to carry forward triumphantly the principles of freedom and progress, until all men and all races shall everywhere beneath the flag of our country have accorded to them freely all that their virtues, industry, intelligence, and energy may entitle them to attain.

Resolved, That organization in unrepresented States assuming to be State governments, not having been legally established, are not legitimate governments until recognized by Congress.

Resolved, That we cherish with tender hearts the memory of the virtuous patriotism, sublime faith, upright Christian life, and generous nature of the martyr President, Abraham Lincoln.

Resolved, That we are in favor of universal liberty the world over, and feel the deepest sympathy with the oppressed people of all countries, in their struggle for freedom and the inherent rights of all men to decide and control for themselves the character of the government under which they live.

Resolved, That the lasting gratitude of the nation is due to men who bore the battle, and in covering themselves with imperishable glory, have shown to the world its hope of free government; and, relying on the invincible soldiers and sailors, who made the grand army and navy of the republic, to be true to the principles for which they fought, we pledge them that we will stand by them in maintaining the honor due the saviors of the nation, and in securing the fruits of their victory.

Resolved, That, remembering with profound gratitude and love the precepts of Washington, we should accustom ourselves to consider the Union as the primary object of patriotic desire, which has heretofore sustained us in our love of Union when too many of our neighbors in the South were waging war for its destruction. Our deep and abiding love for the memory of the Father of his Country, and for Union, is more deeply engraven upon our hearts than ever.

Mr. Maynard suggested that the vote on the resolutions of respect to the memory of Abraham Lincoln be taken by rising and in silence.

The suggestion was adopted, and the resolution was unanimously agreed to in the manner proposed.

The resolutions were then, on motion, adopted as a whole.

The following is the address issued by the Convention:

THE ADDRESS.

The appeal of the loyal men of the South to their fellow-citizens af the United States.

The representatives of eight millions of American citizens appeal for protection and justice to their friends and brothers in the states that have been spared the cruelties of the rebellion and the direct horrors of civil war.

Here, on the spot where freedom was proffered and pledged by the fathers of the Republic, we implore your help against a reorganized oppression, whose sole object is to remit the control of our destinies to the contrivers of the rebellion after they have been vanquished in honorable battle, thus at once to punish us for our devotion to our country, and to entrench themselves in the official fortifications of the Government.

Others have related the thrilling story of our wrongs from reading and observation.

We come before you as unchallenged witnesses, and speak from personal knowledge our sad experience. If you fail us, we are more utterly deserted and betrayed than if the contest had been decided against us; for in that case even victorious slavery would have found profit in the speedy pardon of those who had been among its bravest foes.

Unexpected perfidy in the highest place of the Government, accidently filled by one who adds cruelty to ingratitude, and forgives the guilty as he proscribes the innocent, has stimulated the almost extinguished revenge of the beaten conspirators; and now, the rebels who offered to yield everything to save their own lives, are asking to consign us to bloody graves.

Where we expected a benefactor we find a persecutor.

Having lost our champion, we return to you who can invoke Presidents and punish traitors. Our last hope under God is the unity and firmness of the states that elected Abraham Lincoln and defeated Jeff. Davis.

The best statement of our case is the appalling, yet unconscious, confession of Andrew Johnson, who in savage hatred of his own record, proclaims his purpose to clothe four millions of traitors with the power to impoverish and degrade eight millions of loyal men. Our wrongs bear alike on all races, and our tyrants unchecked, you will award the same fate to white and black. We can remain as we are only as inferiors and victims. We may fly from our homes, but we should fear to trust our fate with those who, after denouncing and defeating treason, refused to right those who have bravely assisted them in the good work. Until we are wholly rescued there is neither peace for you nor prosperity for us. We cannot better define at once our wrongs and our wants, than by by declaring that since A. Johnson affiliated with his early slanderers and our constant enemies, his hand has been laid heavily upon us in the South.

History, the just judgment of the present, and the confirmation of the future, advise and declare that after rejecting his own remedies for restoring the Union, he has resorted to restoring the weapons of traitors, to bruise and beat down patriots; that after declaring that none but the loyal should govern the reconstructed South, he has practiced upon the maxim that none but traitors shall rule; that while in the North he has removed conscientious men from office, and filled many of the vacancies with the sympathizers of treason in the South, he has removed the proved and true patriots, and selected the equally proved and convicted traitors; that after brave men, who had fought for the old flag, have been nominated for positions, their names have been recalled and avowed rebels substituted; that every original Unionist in the South, who stands fast to Andrew Johnson's covenants from 1861 to 1866, has been ostracised; that he has corrupted the local courts, by offering premiums for the defiance of the laws of Congress, and by openly discouraging the observance of oaths against treason, while refusing to punish one single conspirator, though thousands had earned the penalty of death. More than a thousand of devoted Union citizens have been murdered in cold blood since the surrender of Lee, and in no case have their assassins been brought to judgment; that he has pardoned some of the worst of the rebel criminals of the South, including some who have taken human life under circumstances of unparalleled atrocity; that while denouncing and fettering the operations of the Freedman's Bureau, he, with full knowledge of the falsehood, has charged that the black men are lazy and rebellious, and has concealed the fact that more whites than blacks have been protected and fed by that noble organization; and that while declaring that it was corruptly managed and expensive to the Government, he has connived at a system of profligacy in the use of the public patronage and public money wholly without parallel save when the traitors bankrupted the treasury and sought to disorganize and scatter army and navy, only to make it more easy to capture the Government; that while declaring against the injustice of leaving eleven states unrepresented, he has refused to authorize the liberal plan of Congress, simply because it recognizes the loyal majority, and refuses to perpetuate the traitor minority; that in every state south of Mason and Dixon's line, his policy has wrought the most deplorable consequences, social, moral, and political. It has emboldened returned rebels to threaten civil war in Maryland, Missouri, West Virginia, and Tennessee, unless the patriots who saved and sealed these states to the old flag surrendered before their arrogant demand. It has corrupted high state officials elected by Union men, and sworn to enforce the laws against returned rebels, and made them the mere instruments of the authors of the rebellion. It has encouraged a new alienation between the sections, and by impeding emigration to the South, has erected a formidable barrier against free and friendly intercourse in the North and West. It has allowed the rebel soldiers to persecute the teachers of the colored schools, and burned the churches in which the freedmen have worshipped the living God.

That a system so barbarous should have culminated in the frightful riots of Memphis, and the still more appalling massacre of New Orleans, was as natural as that a bloody war should follow from the teachings of John C. Calhoun and Jeff. Davis.

Andrew Johnson is responsible for all these unspeakable cruelties, and as he provoked, so he justifies and applauds them, sending his agents and emissaries into the refined and patriotic metropolis to insist upon making his reckless policy a test upon a Christian people. He forgot that the protection extended to the 14th of August convention was not only denied to the free people of New Orleans on the 30th of July, when they assembled to discuss how best to protect themselves, but denied amidst the slaughter of hundreds of innocent men. No page in the record of his recent outrages upon human justice and constitutional law is more dark than that which assisted in the preparations for that awful carnage, and not only refusing to punish, but toiling to throw the guilty responsibility upon unoffending and innocent freedmen.

The infatuated tyrant that stood ready to crush his own people in Tennessee when they were struggling to maintain a Government erected by himself, against his and other traitorous persecutions, was even more eager to illustrate his savage policy by clothing with the most despot replete with unparralleled injuries and usurpations. It developed only the agricultural localities, geographically distinct from the free labor localities, and less than one-third of the whole with African slaves. It held 4,000,000 of human beings as chattles, yet made them the basis of unjust power for themselves in Federal and State Governments. To maintain slavery it excluded free white labor from the richest agricultural lands of the world, forced them to remain inactive and unfruitful in the mineral lands and lumber localities, embracing two-thirds of the South in square miles and real undeveloped wealth, simply because the localities were agriculturally too poor for slave labor, and condemned to agriculture, on this unagricultural locality, and consigned them to unwilling ignorance and poverty by denying capital and strangling enterprise. It repelled the capital, energy, and will of the free states from labor localities, by unmitigated tolerance and proscription, thus guarding the approaches to their slave domain against democracy. Statute-books groaned under despotic laws against unlawful and insurrectionary assemblies. It aimed at the constitutional guarantees to the right to peaceably assemble and petition for the redress of grievances. It proscribed democratic literature as incendiary. It nullified constitutional guarantees of freedom, and free speech, and a free press. It deprived citizens of the other states of their privileges and immunities in the states, an injury and usurpation alike unjust to Northern citizens, and destructive of the best interests of the states themselves. Alarmed at the progress of democracy in the face of every discouragement, at last it sought immunity by secession and war. The heart sickens with a contemplation of the four years that followed. Forced loans, impressments, conscriptions, with bloody hands and bayonets; the number of aged men, who had long laid aside the implements of labor, who had been summoned to the field, the conscription of their sons; to support their children and grandchildren reduced to the verge of starvation; of the slaughter of noble youth—types of physical manhood, forced into a war against those with whom they were identified by every interest; long months of incarceration in rebel Bastiles; banished from home and hearthstones—are but a part of the long catalogue of horrors.

But Democrats, North and South combined, defeated them. They lost. What did they lose? The cause of oligarchy? They lost African slavery by name only. As soon as the tocsin of war ceased, as soon as the clang of arms was hushed, they raise the cry of immediate admission, and with that watchword commence to organize, under new forms, a system to continue their unbridled sway. They rehabilitate with them, seeking control of all local and state organizations.

The Federal Executive, readily seduced, easily yields to these monsters. Aided by his unscrupulous disregard of the Constitution and laws, by his merciless proscription of true democratic opinions, and by all his appliances of despotic power, they now defiantly enter the lists in the loyal North, and seek to wring from freemen an endorsement of their wicked designs. Every foul agency is at work to accomplish this result. Falsely professing to assent to the abolition of slavery, they are trying to gain their detested power by acts against pretended vagrants. They know that any form of servitude will answer their unholy purpose. They pronounce the four years' war a brilliant sword scene in the great revolutionary drama. Proscriptive public sentiment holds high carnival, and, profiting by the example of the Presidential platform breathes out the continuing of slaughter against loyalists, and denounces all legal restraint, and assails with tongue of malignant slander the constitutionally chosen representatives of the people. To still the voice of liberty, dangerous alone to tyrants, midnight conflagrations and assassinations are called to aid a reign of terror through all these ten States, making loyalty stand silent in the presence of treason, or whisper in bated breath. Strong men openly hesitate to speak for liberty, and decline to attend a convention at Philadelphia for fear of destruction. But all Southern men are not yet awed into submission to treason, and we have assembled from all these States, determined that liberty, when endangered, shall find a mouth-piece, and that the government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth. We are here to consult together how best to provide for a Union of truly republican States; to seek to resume the thirty-six stars on the old flag. We are here to see that ten of these stars, opaque bodies, paling their ineffectual fires beneath the gloom and darkness of oligarchial tyranny and oppression are made to be brilliant stars, emblems of constitutional liberty; glittering orbs, sparkling with the life-giving principles of the model Republic, fitting ornaments of the glorious banner of freedom. Our past and only hope is in the unity and fortitude of the loyal people of America in the support and vindication of the 39th Congress and the election of a controlling Union majority in the succeeding or 40th Congress. While the new article amending the Constitution offers the most liberal conditions to the authors of the rebellion, and does not come up to our expectation, we believe its ratification would be the commencement of a complete and lasting protection to all our people; and therefore we accept it as the best present remedy, and appeal to our brothers and friends in the North and West to make it their watchword in the coming election.

The tokens are auspicious of overwhelming success. However little the verdict of the ballot-box may affect the reckless man in the Presidential chair, we cannot doubt that traitors and their sympathizers will recognize that verdict as the surest indication that the mighty power which crushed the rebellion is still titanic, and that those who attempt to oppose or defy it will do so at the risk of their own destruction.

Our confidence in the overruling providence of God prompts the prediction and intensifies the belief that, when this warning is sufficiently taught to these misguided and reckless men, the liberated millions of the South will be proffered those rights and franchises which may be necessary to adjust and settle this mighty controversy in the spirit of the most enlarged and Christian philanthropy.

Montana Scenery.

The scenery of the Yosemite Valley, as described by Bowles in his new book, "Across the Continent," though very grand and peculiar, is not more remarkable than the scenery at the passage of the Yellow Stone through the Snowy Range, one hundred miles northeast of this city. The rocks on either side, for a great distance, are equal in height to those of the Yosemite, and the river steals through the gorge with the swiftness and stillness of an immense serpent, leaping into joyous rapids at the point of its release. We should like to have Bierstadt visit this portion of our Territory. He could make a picture from this piece of scenery surpassing either of his other views of the Rocky Mountains.—Montana Post.

NEBRASKA.—The Nebraska Golden Age claims that that Territory is steadily progressing, and promises to become the Empire State west of the Missouri. Immigration is pouring into it from all parts of the East and Europe. The winters are very severe, but no worse than Minnesota and Northern Michigan. It is supposed that under the broad plains lies an abundance of coal, which will compensate for the lack of timber for fuel.

THE law of God, not the conscience of man, is the rule of duty.
